Painter of Desert

Walter Ufer—himself, a foremost American artist, whose work many critics prophesy will live in equality with if not surpassing that of the late George Bellows—has been in Evanston since the opening of the exhibition of his paintings hung in the ballroom of the Georgian hotel, to close next Monday. Mr. Ufer hails from Taos, N. Mex., and his paintings shown are chiefly of southwest desert and mountain country scenes and people.

Miss Emily Hadley of 913 Oak street returned Friday for the holidays from the University of Wisconsin.

Legend Cantata Is Sung at Festival at National College

The cantata, the "Legend of the Dumb Boy," will be presented at the Christmas festival of the National Kindergarten and Elementary college to be held in Harrison hall this afternoon.

The story, one of the beautiful old legends which center around the birth of Christ, is given very simply. As the curtains are drawn aside little children of old Judea come running with songs and glad cries to see the tiny baby cradled in the manger of the rude stable, and with them, eager and alert as they, but pitifully silent, is the little dumb boy.

As the children gaze in awe rugged shepherds come to see the wondrous thing that has come to pass, of which the angels have told them, and the three eastern kings, guided to the stable by the radiant star, offer their gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh.

Kings and shepherds and little children kneel in adoration, but suddenly the stillness is broken with a sweet, child-like song of praise—the little dumb boy has touched the sleeping child and found voice for his overflowing joy and happiness. And Mary, watching over her son, sings to him a lullaby of such surpassing sweetness that all is forgotten save only the love of the mother for the little child, God's great gift of love to the world.

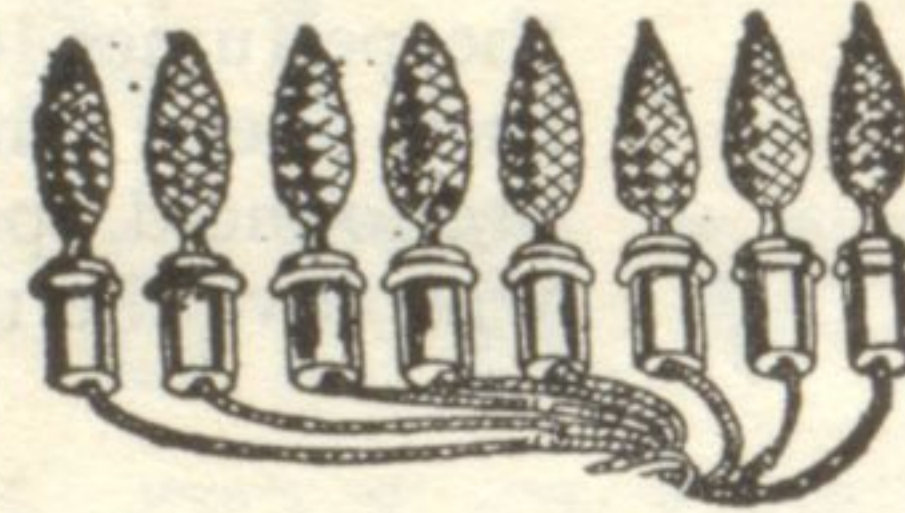

Miss Grace Ryerson of Evanston has been chosen to take the part of Mary, and other characters in the cantata are: The Dumb Boy, Lucile Bucchele; St. John, Isabel Raymond; Joseph, Clara Tutt; Wise Men, Irma Keith, Ethel Smith, Lucile Molison; Shepherds, Mary Margaret Deerfield, Nina Criss.

The cantata will be given under the direction of Miss Louise St. John Westervelt and Miss Etta Mount.
