

Does the Robin Ever Leave Our Temperate Clime?

The conflicting forecast of what the remainder of the winter season is to bring forth in the way of weather was finally adjudicated by Magistrate C. T. Northrop, Monday morning, at his office, 556 Center street, Winnetka, even though it was only three days after New Year's.

Testimony from some of the most prominent weather prognosticators of the land had been heard, substantiating their contention that this was to be the "rip-roarinest" winter this country had witnessed in many years.

Others had testified that January, February and March, "the backbone of the winter," are to be very mild months, from the weather point of view, as the three governing days of those months, December 20, 21 and 22 were all mild, pleasant days.

The wild fowl, ducks and geese, evidence shows, have been none too positive in their decision as to just what to expect. They have been flitting back and forth during the past several weeks, from San Jacinto to Hudson bays, undecided where to camp to insure the greatest degrees of comfort.

But Monday, as Magistrate Northrop sat in his office looking across the street into railroad park, Winnetka, he suddenly began whistling, "When the Red, Red Robin, Goes Bob, Bob Bobin' Along," and declared then and there, that the big red robin red breast which, at that moment dodged the rain drops and snow flakes and alighted in a tree across the street, was the real harbinger of spring, and like Solomon of old, Judge Northrop adjudicated the perplexing question of today—"the weather."

Robins are harbingers of spring, the first one of the year has arrived and Judge Northrop insists this will be a short, mild winter with spring just in the offing.
