Our National Efficiency

PRESENT cost levels are much higher than those of ten years ago, so that each additional telephone installed now increases the average investment per telephone. To maintain the service the company's revenues must keep pace with this condition.

VISITORS to the United States from other countries marvel at the efficiency of our great industrial organizations, of the skill with which great crowds are handled on occasions of public interest, and a score of other things in which the ability of American organizers to handle things in great volume is shown.

The principal tool or instrument behind these seeming marvels is usually found to be the telephone. Take telephone service out of our great factories, our great stores, our great expositions and congresses, and confusion will be likely to replace the smoothness and efficiency at which the visitors marvel.

Studies extending over half a century have brought the telephone service in America to its present efficiency. While this is most strikingly shown in connection with big affairs and great emergencies, it is likewise to be found in the ordinary service, which is at the call of any and every telephone subscriber.
