Greeley Pupils Relate Stories About Vikings

An assembly program of unusual interest was given by the children of Mrs. Norvell's sixth grade class at the Greeley school Thursday afternoon. For some time the pupils have been studying about the Vikings. In connection with their regular class work and as an outgrowth of their study of the life of these ancient people, they constructed a model of one of the Viking feast halls. This was placed upon display in the assembly hall while the children told the rest of the school, stories about the sea-rovers, their history and their habits.

The miniature hall was made entirely out of wood, cut and hacked to resemble the hewn logs of which the original buildings were built. Because the Vikings covered their buildings with tar, the model was painted black and the cracks calked in just the same manner. On the inside and front of the hall, each beam and post had carved upon it, designs of serpents and figures of various kinds. The floor was of dirt and upon it were arranged the tables, benches and open fires, ready in every respect for the home-coming of the masters of the feast. Even the shields and spears, made of old kid gloves and slate, hung in their places, while on the walls were arranged tapestries and pictures of bright colors. All of the children report a most enjoyable and instructive program.

"The fire only refines, it does not destroy. We are to be brought through the fire, not left in it. The Lord values his people as silver, and therefore he is at pains to purge away their dross. If we are wise, we shall welcome the refining process rather than decline it. Our prayer will be that our alloy may be taken from us rather than that we should be withdrawn from the crucible."

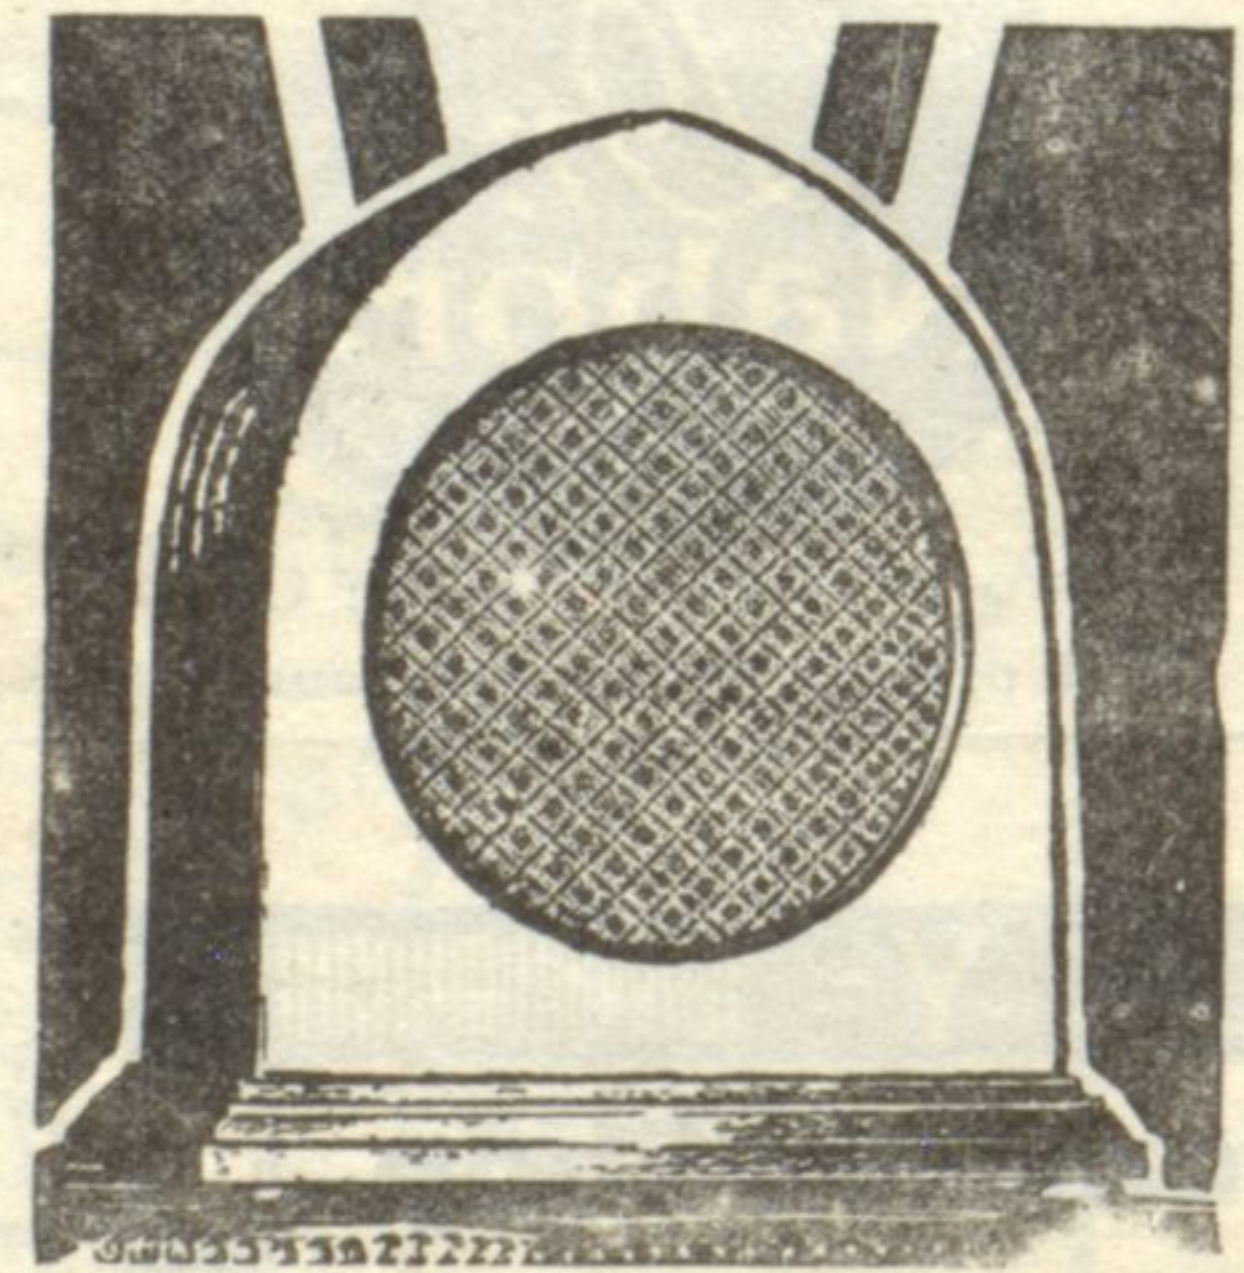

AT MEETING IN EAST

Perry Dunlap Smith, headmaster of North Shore Country Day school, left Thursday for Boston, Mass., to attend a meeting of the Headmasters' association.
