Llewellyn Jones of Post Gives Talk on Meaning of the Arts

Llewellyn Jones, author and literary critic of the Chicago Evening Post, was the speaker Wednesday afternoon at Harris hall, Northwestern university campus, delivering the contemporary thought course lecture directed by Prof. Baker Brownell.

Mr. Jones discussed "The Meaning of the Arts." He said among much of interest:

"The artist is simply a man who by temperament tends to take an aesthetic view of certain realms. Whether he is a landscape painter or a psychological novelist, he is first of all interested in aesthetic experience. His art is simply his technical method—through words, through colors, through musical sounds—of reproducing his aesthetic experience."

There have been a number of changes in lecture dates of the various people of importance engaged to give the spring lectures in this course. Zona Gale, prominent author, dramatist and educator, who was scheduled to speak next Wednesday, will not come until April 20. She will at that time discuss "The New Literature."

The lecture Wednesday will be delivered by C. J. Bulliet, art editor of the Art World magazine and dramatic critic of the Chicago Evening Post. He will discuss "The New Art." Karleton Hackett, eminent Chicago musician and music critic, spoke March 23 instead of April 13, for which later date he was scheduled, and that date will be given to Charles E. Merriam, professor of political science and chairman of the department of political science at the University of Chicago. April 27 the speaker will be Edward Sapir, associate professor of anthropology and American Indian languages, University of Chicago, his subject, "The Background of Spiritual and Aesthetic Life."

The lectures in May will be given in sequence by Shailer Mathews, Prof. Delton T. Howard, Prof. Richard T. Ely and Clarence Darrow, and the final lecture will be delivered June 1 by Prof. Brownell.
