Observer Gives Graphic Description of Day's Activities at Indian Hill Camp

BY D. C.

Remember our blue Lake Hamlin Where each year we come to stay: How quickly the days fly by us As together we work and play: Remember the friendships made here Are those so staunch and true; So, here now, around our camp fire Indian Hill, we'll sing to you.

Reluctantly, if it were not for home, some twenty-five campers return today from Chief Davies' camp in the Michigan woods. After eighteen days spent working and playing in the open in common fellowship, these boys have Dabe, Kenneth McLain, John Klauke, many stories to relate - overnight hikes, midnight feasts, Chief's stories around the campfire, and a fifteen mile prize committee, Henry Klauke; re- paddle up the Sable river and back, only to mention a few. Traditional Initiation

It is a tradition at Indian Hill camp to initiate on the second day those for whom it is their first year. Some of the pranks played on the newcomers by the old campers often take peculiar bents. He would notice boys dashing about on errands. One fellow, for example, was sent to find the keys to the flagpole. He must have spent the whole morning at it. Others were sent after two-handled shovels and four-post yard sticks. The amusing thing about it all was that such things were taken in all seriousness. For instance, one fellow was actually going to polish up the lookout tower if it hadn't been for the fact that the shoe blacking could not be located at the last minute.
