White Plague Death Rate in Rapid Drop, Says Health Leader

“In the city of Chicago deaths from tuberculosis have declined from 173.9 per 100,000 in 1900 to 83.0 in 1926. This decline is noted both in the rates from pulmonary tuberculosis (consumption) and from other forms of the disease,” states Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, Chicago commissioner of health, in his latest bulletin.

“There are more deaths among males than among females from tuberculosis. In every 100,000 men, eighty die from consumption each year. In every 100,000 women only sixty-six die from this disease.

“Death rates from tuberculosis are from two and a half to three times as high for the negro as for the white population. The increase in the tuberculosis death rate in the general population is due to the increase in the death rate among negroes. For children under 11 years of age the negro death rate in the years 1924, 1925 and 1926 has been from 10 to 20 times as high as for the white children of the same ages,” continues the Commissioner.

“Among persons under 11 years of age, the mortality from tuberculosis is tremendous among negroes. Nearly 41 per cent of the deaths in this age group in 1926 were deaths of negro children, although only three percent of the children under 11 years of age are negroes.

“The marked declines in the tuberculosis mortality in the last twelve years have been in the age periods 0 to 11, and 20 to 60. The lowered mortality in the first few years of life is due to a very marked decrease in the number of deaths from forms of tuberculosis other than pulmonary. The declines in the rates after 20 years of age are due to reductions in the death rates from pulmonary tuberculosis.

“So far as we can learn from the records, they show lower death rates in the months since the establishment of the ordinance which limits Chicago's milk supply to that milk coming only from tested herds than in the corresponding months of the immediately preceding years. This is evidenced by the average rates for the nine months' period and for five of the months taken separately,” says Dr. Bundesen.

“The largest number of deaths from tuberculosis among children come in the month of April. This seems to argue for the greater need for care during the winter months,” concludes the commissioner.
