EXPERT VIEWS CHILD TANTRUM AS NATURAL

Edna Dean Baker Tells Parent-Teacher Group How to Attack Behavior Problems

When little Jimmy, age 4, throws a temper tantrum and refuses to go to bed at the usual hour, his rebellion is in the nature of a behavior problem, said Miss Edna Dean Baker, president of the National Kindergarten and Elementary college, in an address last Monday before the Parent-Teacher association of Michigan City, Ind.

"Your little Jimmy is merely reacting to certain stimuli, and not showing an outcropping of the original sin," Miss Baker told the group.

"The particular reaction is undesirable, to be sure, and the wise teacher or parent will find a way to remove the stimuli or help Jimmy to modify his reaction. This is far better than the old method of ignoring the problem as long as possible and then seeking through arbitrary punishments to bring about the desired reform or at least make the child suffer for wrongdoing."

President Baker, who is a specialist in child psychology, said that parents and teachers are learning to accept these problems as natural and expected, to diagnose them, taking into consideration the child's physical and mental condition, and the various factors that enter into the situation.

The First Twenty Minutes mean much in the Quality of Milk

The important time in the production of milk is the first twenty minutes after it is drawn from the cow.

When it is produced by cautious, careful methods, in clean, sterile utensils and quickly cooled to 50 degrees Fahrenheit or below, no change takes place in the physical and chemical composition of the milk.

And it is at this critical stage that "Selected" is safeguarded by the highest degree of care and supervision.

That famous sweet, natural taste you enjoy when you drink a glass of "Selected" is the result of years of work and study to safeguard those first twenty minutes.

If you wish to know more about Chicago's better drinking milk, ask the Borden Milkman in your neighborhood.
