

Tells How to Show Tulips in Garden to Best Advantage

By Rosa Rugosa

Too often tulips are planted in a haphazard fashion without any thought given to arrangement of color, height, or variety. A magnificent range of form and color will be found in the Darwin tulip, most suitable for a formal garden. They should be planted in groups of a dozen or more of one variety. The Clara Butt, a delicate apple-blossom pink, with just a touch of salmon and silver shading, is one of the best of the Darwin variety. Farncombe Sanders, a very large rosy-scarlet with white base, is a popular variety.

The Darwins bloom in May, and for soft colors in all tones of pink and red, mauve to roval purple and violets to a color bordering on black, they are unequalled.

Among the Cottage tulips will be found the unusual type, most excellent for natural effects in gardens of an informal character. Numbered among the favorites are the Ambrosia, in color an exquisite amber rose, the Alaska, a golden yellow with a very long flower with pointed petals, and the Dido a brilliant orange red turning to orange yellow near the edge. The inside has a black bordered deep yellow base. It is a magnificent flower with a strong, long stem. It is impossible to give space to the many new Cottage types, each more interesting than the other.

The Breeder tulips can be planted to good advantage between evergreens and in sunken gardens. They, like the Darwin, flower in May and have the most peculiar colors of the tulip family. Many soft buffs, browns and coppery bronze abound in these artistic and agreeably fragrant flowers. Lucifer, a clear orange with rosy flush and olive base, also Madame Lethierrey,

"Living Dead Man" Now Showing at Playhouse

"The Living Dead Man," based on Luigi Pirandello's satiric novel, "The Late Matthias Pascal," will be shown at the Chicago Playhouse, the unique little cinema movement theater at 410 S. Michigan Avenue, during the week beginning Saturday, October 22.

Produced in France by Marcel L'Herbier, said to be the most intelligent director of that country, the film relates an episode in the life of the artistic Pascal who pretends he is dead in order to escape his monotonous existence.

Two actors became famous through this film. Lois Moran, one of the most popular leading women in America, made her motion picture debut in "The Living Dead Man." The other is Ivan Mosjoukine, a Russian, who has since played many important roles including the leading part in "Michael Strogoff." Mosioukine is now in Hollywood working in a film for an American producing company.

Following the showing of the Pirandello opus, the Playhouse will present "Polvkushka," a Russian drama, with Ivan Moskvin, one of the greatest Russian actors of all time, in the lead. Moscow Art Theater Players are in the supporting cast.

Other films to be shown here shortly are "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," the film which more than any other is responsible for the little cinema movement; "The Street," a psychological drama and Tolstoi's "Power of Darkness."
