

Prospects Are Bright for Well-Planned Investments in North Shore Business Property

Think over how the old law of Supply and Demand must affect values of North Shore business property.

Demand increases as population grows. And population growth in this region is keeping up with the most optimistic predictions. Supply remains constant. Zoning restrictions remain definitely drawn because of the residential character of these communities.

North Shore values are naturally increasing and must continue to do so. This further increases the demand, and recommends business property here as a splendid investment.

Quinlan & Tyson representatives, covering the North Shore, are continuously posted on the best values and offerings. By using the information and facilities of this close-coupled organization, you can plan a sound investment and carry it through to profit. 43 years of experience, specializing on the North Shore, equip this firm to give dependable advice and service.

The North Shore's bright future is presented fully in our new booklet, "In Greater Chicago—Where to Invest?" Get your copy, and discuss investment prospects further with us. Call, phone or write.

Business Property Is Scarce
