Youthful Audience Enthusiastic Over Symphony Concert

by Critic

Haydn's "Surprise Symphony," which has been used to good effect in many musical programs, some of them of relatively greater moment than this one, proved to be an entirely appropriate opening number for the first of the afternoon concerts for young people which the Little Symphony orchestra presented under the direction of George Dasch at the New Trier High school last Monday. While some of the music lovers of the north shore who have been more or less intimately acquainted with Mr. Dasch's organization, have been predicting that the concerts would be unusually pleasing this year, even they were not quite prepared for the pleasant surprise which accompanied the opening number.

Last year's concerts were a splendid beginning for the re-vamped orchestra but, as fine as the programs were, they cannot compare with the opening concert which was presented last Monday afternoon. The many hours of practice together have had a decided effect upon the organization and have resulted in an orchestra of the finest of quality. There was in evidence throughout the concert an appreciation of spirit and theme that had the effect of establishing Mr. Dasch's orchestra upon a very high and very firm pedestal of favor with its auditors.

Maria Matyas, the soloist for the afternoon, was charming and in both the aria from "Mignon" and the lighter Russian folk songs fulfilled every expectation that might have been held by her audience.
