Current Output at Light Plant Shatters Record

Tuesday, December 13, the 24 hour output of electric current from the Winnetka municipal plant exceeded 21,000 kilowatt hours for the first time in the history of the village.

This is the time of the year when the use of electricity in Winnetka homes begins to mount rapidly, because of the shorter hours of daylight, prevalence of overcast skies and increasing use of numerous electric appliances such as heaters, oil burners, etc, it is explained.

At this time of the year, the Village receives many requests for investigation of apparently high bills for electric service, and it is the policy of the Village administration to investigate such cases promptly and cheerfully, by re-reading meters and testing consumers' wiring for possible defects. The record of these special investigations shows that, excepting in rare instances, meters have been read carefully, are registering with a high degree of accuracy and that the consumption is due to the increased use of electric energy in the household.

An effort has been made during the past year by the Village electric department to inform residents of the village about the reading of their own electric meter, so that any consumer may check up his own consumption from day to day, and thereby take steps to eliminate waste of current caused by the unnecessary use of lights and also due to the use of heavy current consuming devices such as electric heaters, before a large bill has been incurred. Any consumer who has not received a copy of the booklet telling how to read an electric meter which was recently distributed by the electric department can obtain a copy from the general office in the Village hall.

his researches. Previous to joining the faculty of Northwestern university, Mr. Bodfish taught and held a position on the research staff of the College of Commerce and Administration, Ohio State university.
