North Shore Man Wins Plaudits in Shakespeare Role

Douglas "Duke" Davisson, a Junior at Brown university and graduate of New Trier High school, class of '25, has had a distinct honor awarded to him as one of the principals in the cast of the first American presentation of Shakespeare's "All's Well That Ends Well." Formerly a resident of Wilmette, Davisson now lives in Glenview.

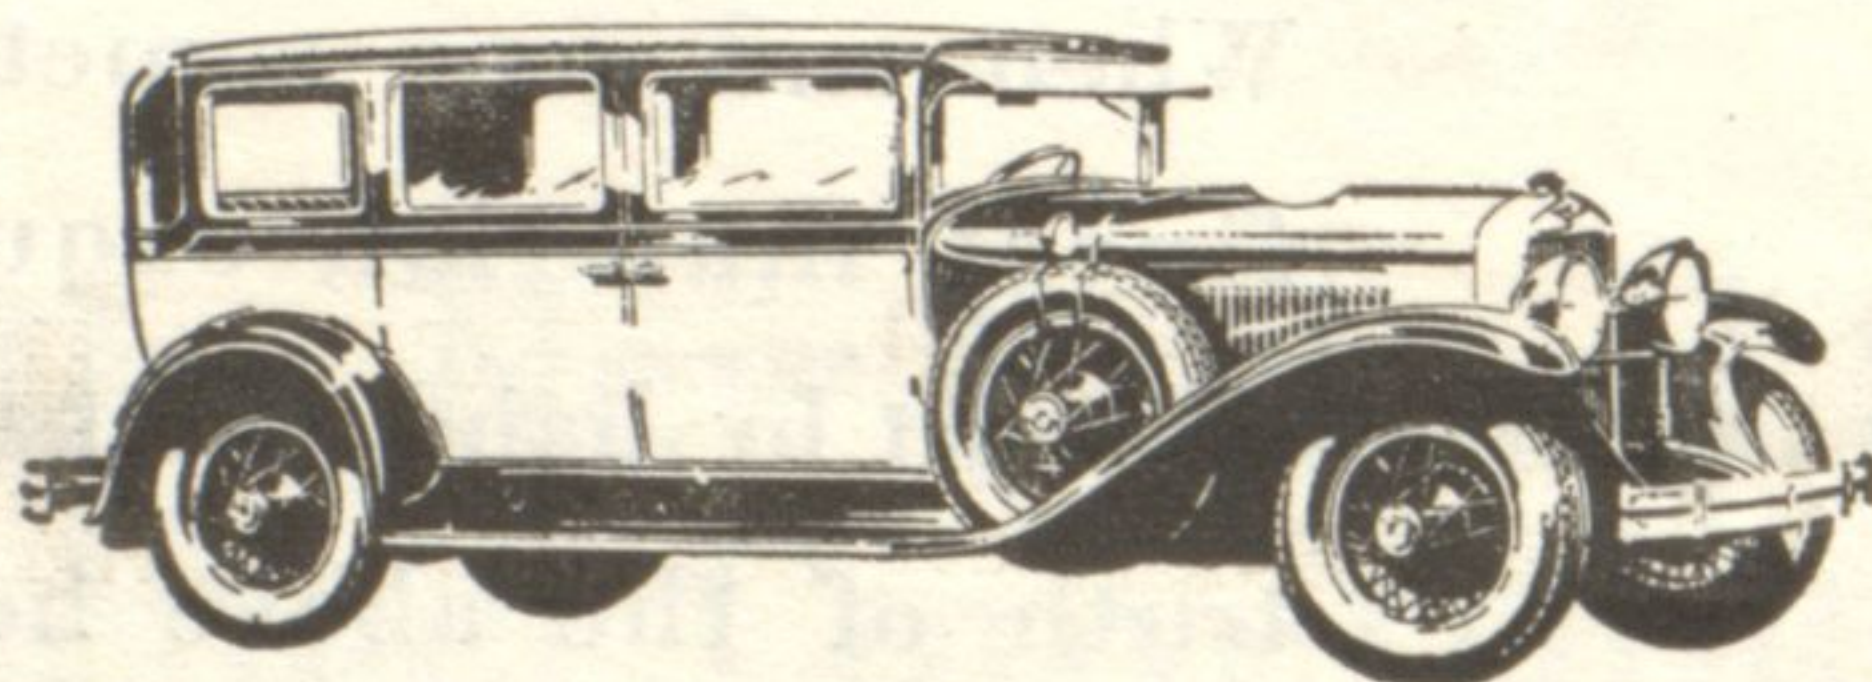

He gave an excellent impersonation in a feminine role as the Widow Capulet. Brown is not a co-educational university, hence the men must also take female parts. Although this play is one of Shakespeare's lesser known works and has never been done in this country before, the presentation at Brown university received splendid criticism, both from newspaper writers, and from the president of the International Shakespeare association, who was present at one of the performances.

Davisson has also done admirable work in other plays given by the Brown university Dramatic society, as well as in plays while studying at New Trier. Incidentally, he is a Junior editor of the Brown Daily Herald. Brown is the smallest university in the country to have a daily paper.
