Make Good Progress in Surfacing of Highways

Eighteen per cent of the existing highway mileage in the United States on January 1, 1927, was surfaced, according to the highway department of the Chicago Motor club. There were 3,019,100 miles of rural roads of all types in this country on that date. This mileage was made up of 287,928 miles on the state systems, and 2,731,172 miles on the county and local systems. According to the bulletin, the states had surfaced approximately 396,401 miles. In using the word "approximately," it was estimated that local surfacing in 1926 amounted to 200,000 miles—the facts for that year not having been fully compiled.

The surfaced mileage included roads with all types of surfacing, such as sand, clay and top soil, gravel, water-bound macadam, bituminous macadam, sheet asphalt, bituminous concrete, Portland cement, concrete, and block pavements of brick, asphalt, wood or stone.

Miss Margery Windes came home last week in time to spend Christmas with her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Windes of 873 Spruce street. Miss Windes had been in Europe for the past half year.

Women Voters Bring Commander Byrd to Chicago for Talk

Commander Richard E. Byrd, one of the most talked of men in this country today, will be in Chicago on the night of January 25 to tell the Greater Chicago public about his recent trans-Atlantic flight, and to give them an outline of his next great undertaking—his aerial expedition to the South Pole.

The Illinois League of Women Voters of which the Winnetka league is a unit, under whose auspices the lecture is to be held, was successful in securing Commander Byrd for this one Chicago public appearance, only after carrying on considerable telegraphic communication with his manager.

Late reports show that those who assisted with the preparations for the Commander's North Pole "journey by air" and the Atlantic Flight confess themselves amazed at the dimensional breadth of his impending expedition to the "bottom of the world." Commander Byrd is to build a tiny city on the rim of the bleak Antarctic Continent as a base for his flight to the South Pole. This base will comprise portable houses, machine shops, radio station, airdome and food and fuel depots.

Byrd will tell his own story at Orchestra hall. In addition he will show motion pictures including many exclusive "shots" taken of the trans-Atlantic flight, pictures of interest taken when he and his party landed on the bleak coast of France at Ver-sur-Mer.

This man who has said little about his achievements holds many distinctions. How many of us remember his having charge of the navigating arrangements for flights of the N-C planes across the Atlantic in 1919; and, again, his being in charge of the navy planes in the Macmillan expedition which finally resulted in Byrd's unique contribution to history; namely, his own flight with Floyd Bennett to the North Pole?

Commander Byrd is a native of Virginia, of which state his brother is now governor. His coming to Chicago at this time is apropos, since concerted action is already much in evidence to make Chicago a great airport city of the world.
