Wally's Golf Hints

Editor's Note: Following is the tenth of a series of golf lessons written by Wally Chamberlain, professional at Glen-coe Golf course, and head of the North Shore Golf School, Winnetka, in which, from week to week, will be presented many helpful hints for those who are just taking up the game of golf, as well as those who have been playing for some time but admit the need for improving their game.

Many players make the mistake of trying to hit the ball too hard. I do not mean to say that the ball is not hit hard, but it must be done properly.

It is very easy to use your shoulder and back too much when trying for distance.

Naturally, it feels as though you are hitting the ball very hard when you grit your teeth, tense your muscles and slam it. In reality, however, when you do this, you slow up your swing, and speed in the club-head is what makes the ball go, not muscular strength.

That is why so many times people have surprised themselves by swinging carelessly at the ball and seeing it travel a long distance.

enough, if you try to swing the club with your arms alone and you will be agreeably surprised at the distance you get with a swing that feels very easy to you, but with which you actually hit the ball harder than the tense muscled one with all the body action.
