

Tours Europe in "Flivver"

THE diminutive two cylinder, twenty horse power monoplane, aptly christened Yankee Doodle and in which Willibald Seypelt, of Winnetka and George Kern, Jr., of New York, have been touring Europe, is expected to arrive in this country some time next month, according to Mr. Seypelt's sister, Mrs. Sauer, wife of Dr. Louis W. Sauer, of 454 Sheridan road, Winnetka.

Willibald Seypelt

The Yankee Doodle, a Klemm-Daimler, made at Stuttgart, Germany, and operated on a Mercedes motor, is said to be the smallest "flivver" plane made, and the young men, who have been attracting world wide attention with it during their tour of Europe, it is said, are returning to the United States with it to put it on the market, with Mr. Seypelt in charge of the Chicago headquarters and Mr. Kern in New York.

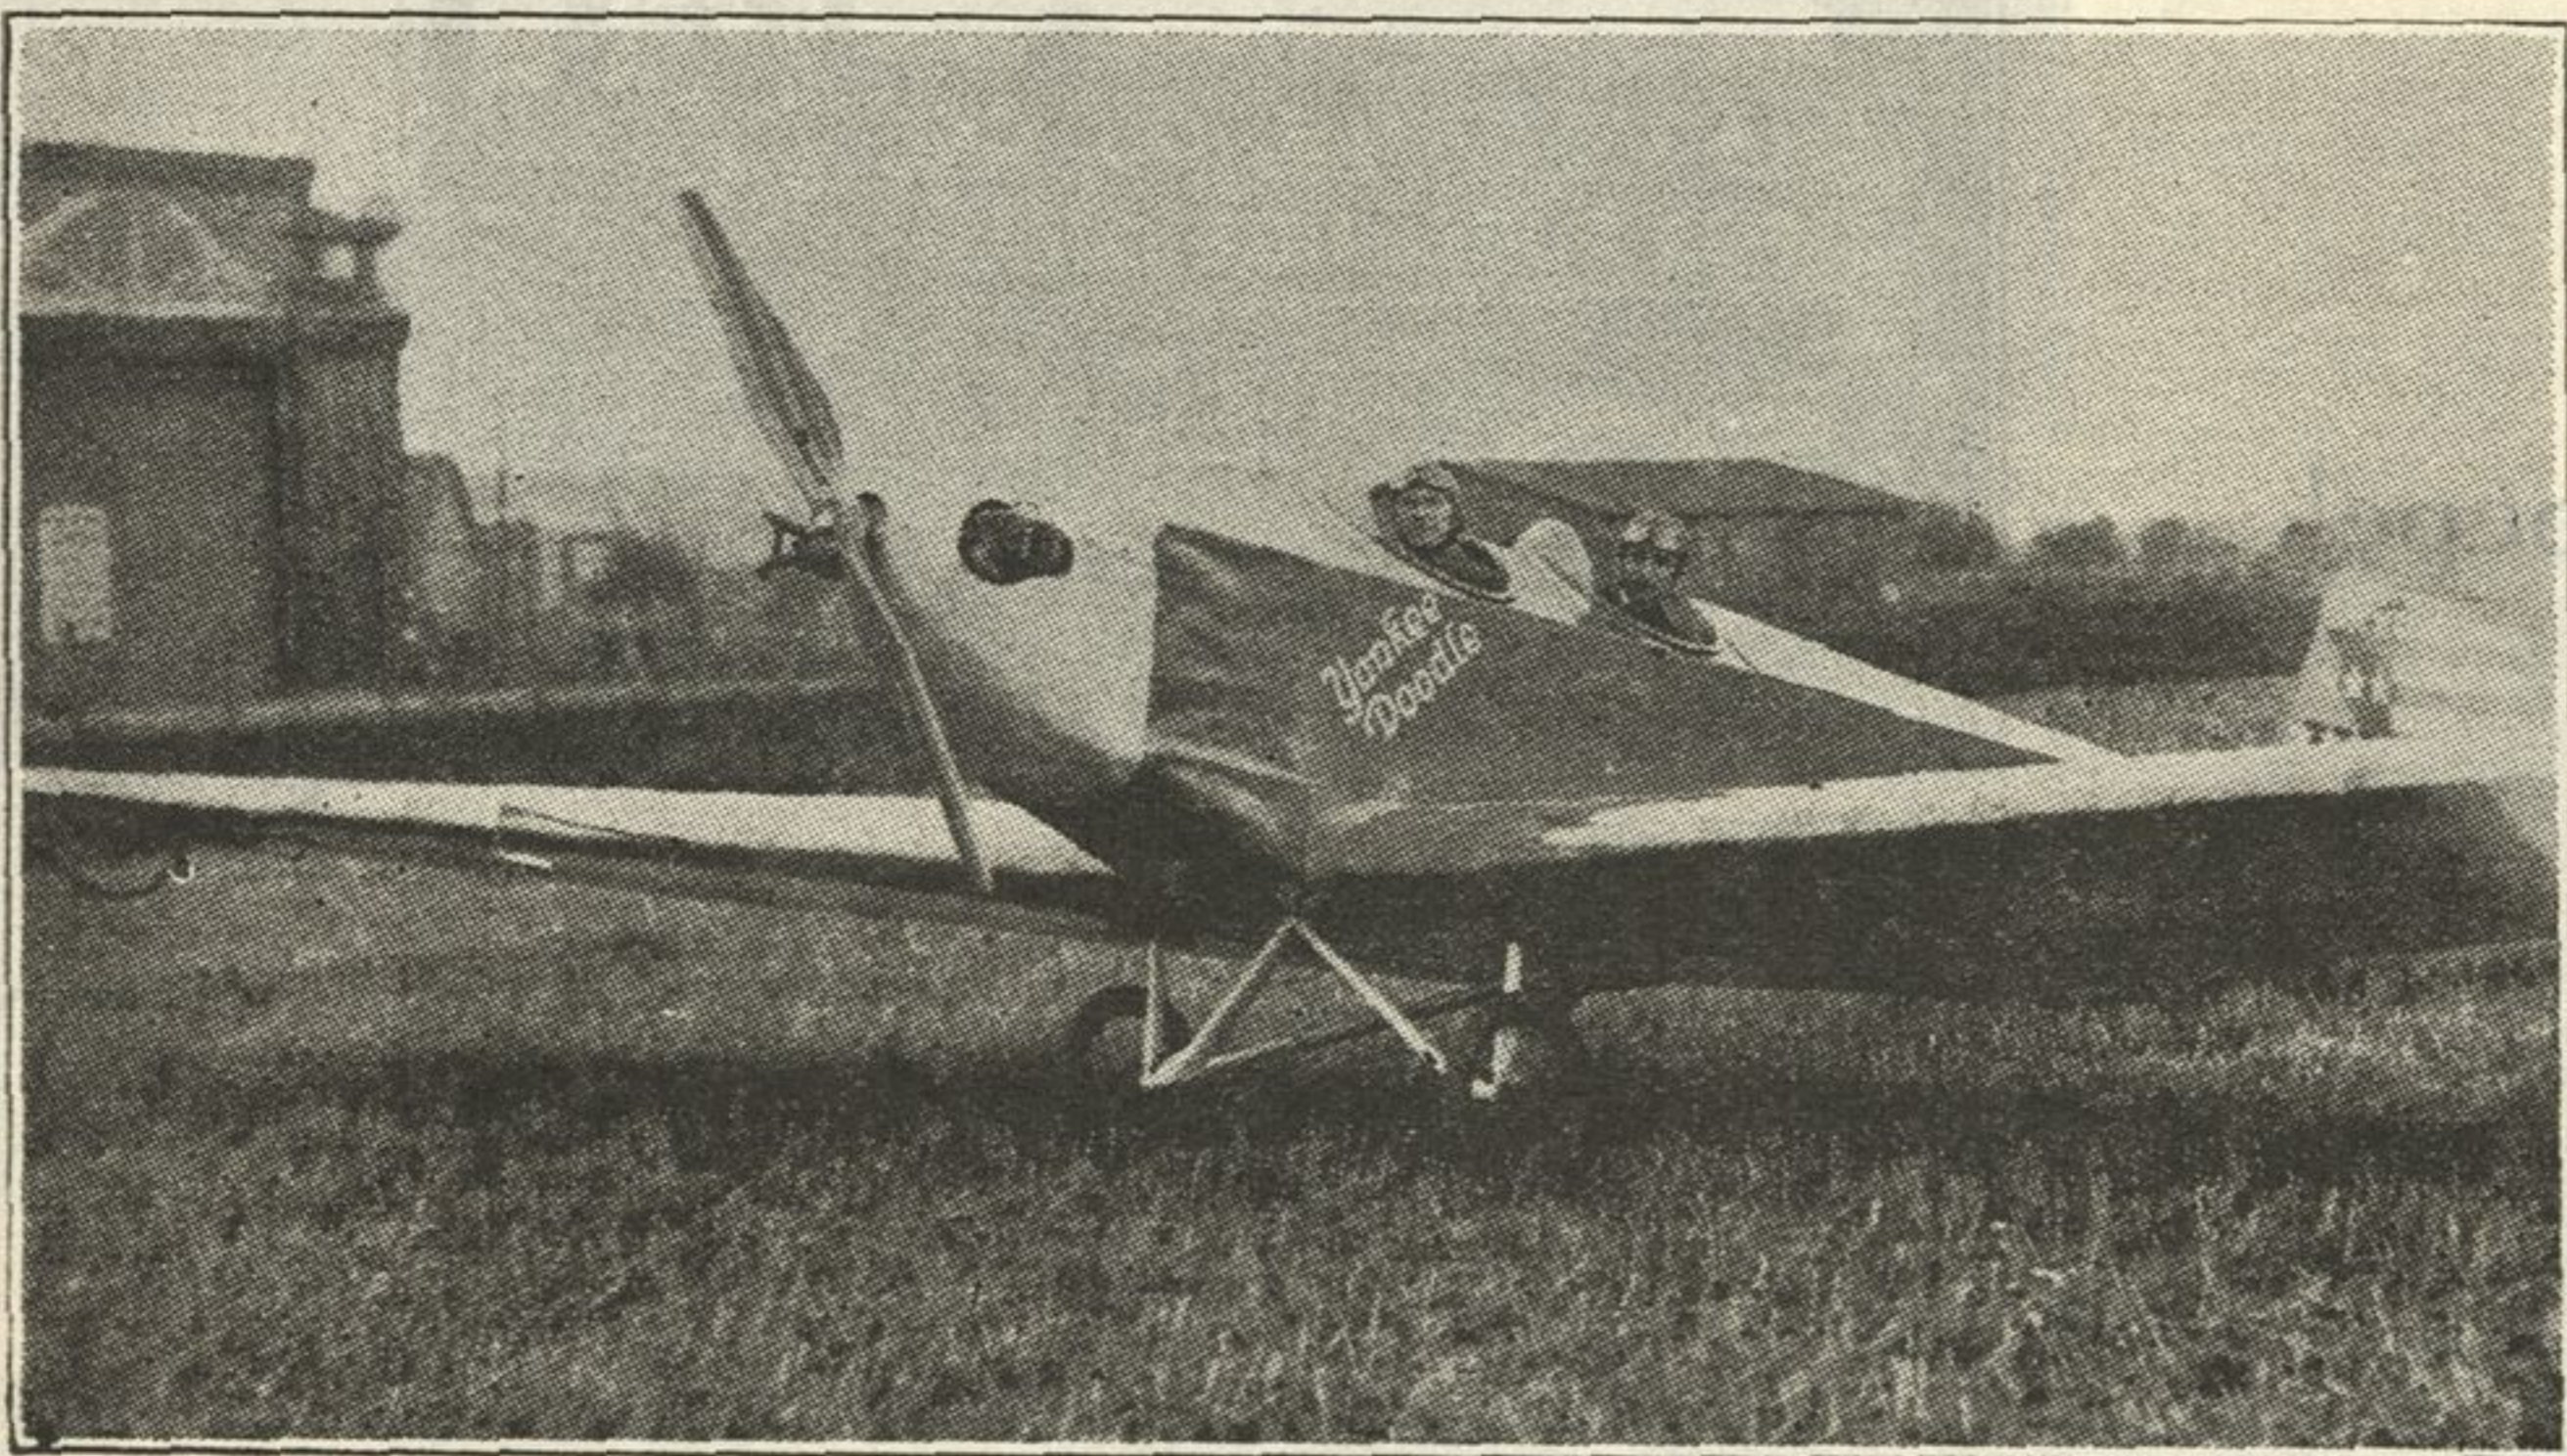

Weights 275 Kilograms

The plane has a wing spread of only 43 feet from tip to tip, is 22 feet in length, weighs 275 kilograms with provision for carrying 200 additional kilos, which is ample allowance for two passengers and baggage. The machine is collapsible and is easily taken apart and costs only $2,100.

In an interview recently given out in Paris, the tourists displayed an expense account of only $9 spent for fuel, oil and hangar charges in covering their itinerary up to that point, and estimated that the cost of a flight from Chicago to New York could be made for $10, and that would mean carrying two people, which in reality would make the trip cost only $5 apiece. The railroad fare between the two cities is about $50.

Take Off from Yard

While Mr. Seypelt is a pilot of considerable experience, Mr. Kern never piloted before in his life, until a few months ago, when he took lessons in the Yankee Doodle, in Germany. After two and one-half hours of instruction he made his first solo flight, taking off and landing entirely by himself. The machine takes off within sixty feet, so the possessor of such a "flivver" plane does not need an aviation field. Any ordinary back yard suffices.

Mr. Seypelt and his companion, who is a son of George Kern, Sr., a New York millionaire, went to Stuttgart, Germany, last summer to make a careful study of the "flivver" plane at the factory. They were there until November 1, when they started on their European tour in one of the machines, flying first to Bordeaux, then to Biarritz, and San Sebastian, thence down through Spain, via Madrid and Algeciras to the Mediterranean. They then crossed to Africa from Gibraltar, skirting the north coast from Ceuta to Tunis and then back across the sea to Alicante, up to Barcelona and Marseilles. Thence they flew along the Riviera and down to Rome, then up to Venice and on to Budapest, Vienna and Berlin.
