Malachi Crowe Starts Prison Term at Joliet

Malachi Crowe, the Negro ex-convict arrested in Kansas City, Kansas, last week and returned to Chicago to answer to a charge of a brutal assault on Miss Ruth Sampson, a white nurse, is now at Joliet, serving a term of from sixty years to life in the penitentiary. Crowe was sentenced by Judge Brothers Monday of this week.

The crime, for which he was sentenced, was committed in Winnetka last summer, since which time Crowe has been a fugitive, but during which time he has been ceaselessly sought, the search being spurred on by the $1,600 reward offered for his arrest, $600 of which was by the Village of Winnetka.

A chance circular given to Ernest Williams, 5041 South Wabash avenue (whose name was on the list the Winnetka police furnished), by Officer Wellington Britton, of Chicago, was the means of capturing Crowe, it is said.

It was Williams who aided Crowe in getting out of Chicago, by giving him a white jacket and allowing him to ride in the kitchen of the dining car on which Williams was chef. He sheltered him in Kansas City, until he obtained a position and kept Crowe informed on police activities.

For this kindness, Crowe reciprocated in a manner which aroused the jealousy of Williams, who at once gave information to the Chicago officers which resulted in his arrest.
