Winnetka Man Provides Chicago Daily With Model of Great California Dam; Looks Like Real Thing

Photographs of the recent disastrous flood in California as the result of the collapse of one of the huge dams above Los Angeles, were whisked eastward by airplane, but the quick thinking of a Winnetka young man enabled one of the Chicago dailies to beat the service of the airplane in the way of getting a photo of the dam for publication.

Frank Luensman, who is now clerking in the hardware store of E. B. Taylor & company, 546 Center street, Winnetka, was a resident in Hollywood, Cal., until recently, engaged in making models of dams, boats and various other things used in the moving picture industry.

When Luensman read the first dispatches about the breaking of the St. Francis dam, he recalled that he had worked on a model of it and also that he had a good photograph of the model.

He telephoned this information to a Chicago daily and post haste a representative called for the photograph and from it there appeared one of the early newspaper illustrations of the structure.

Luensman is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Luensman of Winnetka.
