

Soph Girls Take Inter-Class Meet in New Trier Pool

The New Trier High school girls' inter-class swimming meet was held Tuesday, March 27. The meet was won by the sophomores with 33 points, juniors second with 27½ points, freshmen third with 8½ points and seniors fourth with seven points. The seniors, who, as juniors, last year won the swimming championship, fell down this year as there were only five on their team, and only two swam in the meet.

Brower was individual winner with 18 points—having won first place in the twenty yard crawl, forty yard free style, twenty yard back stroke, and second place in the crawl stroke for form. Tencher and Johnstone tied for second with ten points each, Martha Tencher having won second place in the forty yard free style, and twenty yard back stroke, and third in the side stroke and crawl for form. Ruth Johnstone annexed her points by winning first place in both the crawl and side strokes for form. Julia Crossley was fourth with 6½ points. Following are the teams and a summary of events:

Black Hills to Be Mecca for Tourists This Year

Fifteen million dollars will be spent in the Black Hills by tourists this summer, it is estimated by a survey based on the growing business of the last few years and the largely multiplied number of requests for information that are coming in this spring to railroads, newspapers and other sources of information.

The focusing of the nation's attention last summer on the mountain oasis where the President and Mrs. Coolidge spent the warm months is one reason for the increased interest. The low rates made by the Chicago and North Western Railway, which make the Black Hills more accessible financially as well as in the matter of hours and miles, is another contributing factor. These rates, it is just announced, will go into effect the first of June.

Springfield, Illinois, ranks second of the cities of the United States in the reduction of cost of food stuffs during 1927.

The New and the Old

Does this School teach modern art? Can we learn to really draw in this School? What does your course in design embrace? So run the questions of those who inquire.

We, here in the Evanston Academy of Fine Arts, realize fully our responsibility to the aspiring young boy or girl. Shall we teach him to draw as it was done when we first were students? Academic, solid, with thorough understanding of anatomical form, composition and value—or shall we only stress design and color as many think that modern art is?

We do both. Even now we are proud of our results. In two months we feel that we have made a splendid start. They draw—not mechanically. They are not copying by rule or in an unfeeling manner but they are learning to draw the figure intelligently, sometimes without the model. Our aim is that they should be able to draw, to express themselves and that the drawings should look like the model. But also, they are being taught the new, beautiful solid ideas that are in modern art so that when they enter the world of art, professionally, a few years hence, they may be equipped to fill the need of their time.

Instruction largely individual. Enrollment any time, day or evening.
