

Dramatic Club in Trial Performance of Contest Drama

Thursday afternoon, April 19, "The Scales and the Sword," by Farnham Bishop, was given by members of the New Trier Dramatic club, in an assembly for the entire school. "The Scales and the Sword" is a one-act play, coached by Gordon Van Kirk, which New Trier will enter in the dramatic contest to be held at the Goodman theater in May.

The motive of the play, as may be guessed from the title, is justice. The action takes place in a town, just after a great fire. The refugees come in to a store, to buy bread, only to find that the storekeeper, knowing that for the time being he has the only available supply of bread, has raised his price to a dollar a loaf. Deaf to every treaty, he is determined to make the most of the occasion. The militia come in. He has yet another chance, when the feeble old Irish woman beseeches "a bit o' bread." He refuses. Upon which the militia shoot him down where he stands, and sword balances the scales.

The part of the storekeeper is played by Kingsley Karnopp, that of the captain of the militia, by Steve Harwood, and Kenneth Lovgren and Dorrance Nygaard have other important parts.

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

The art student in this country usually has in view some type of work that is typically American. Many there are who come to School here to become advertising illustrators. Others would do Interior Decoration. Still others would become book illustrators, painters or designers. But regardless of their first ambitions, be they very lofty or the passing fancies of the young boy or girl, it is the aim of our School to teach them what they want to learn in a practical, direct method, and in doing this to open the gate-way to the whole world of artistic expression. Perchance they may find that their capacities enable them to go much farther than they originally hoped.

At the time of her enrollment the young lady who made the above drawing wished to do Fashion Illustrations such as are now used in every newspaper. She learned how to make fashion drawings but she has learned also many other things. In our School exhibit, which will be held from May 9th to 12th, we shall take great pride in showing to you her oil paintings as well as the work of a hundred other students.
