Did You Ever See The Purple Of The Cholla Cactus Bloom?

At Los Cerros in New Mexico the spring comes gently in with never a thought of April showers or dripping days. Soon in the crevices of the mountain rocks the spiny cholla cactus will break out its purple blooms—the color of the desert sunset. The greening aspens feather out among the high pines and cedars. The bridle paths are fresh with spring-time odors as your sturdy western horse mounts along the trail. A tennis court waits your return, a cloudless turquoise sky calls you to it all of every day, an open fire will break the crispness of the mountain nights. Los Cerros was once a Spanish rancho, now a modern ranch resort. It is but two miles from Santa Fe, easily accessible from Chicago. Write for an illustrated booklet—or ask for it at the Mr. Foster Service or Marshall Field Travel Department.
