IN ANNUAL MEETING

State Convention of Business-Professional Women in Session at Evanston This Week

Evanston will be host-or hostess, rather, for it is the women of that city who are having their day-to women leaders in business, arts and professions throughout the state over this week-end during the seventh annual convention of the Illinois Federation of Business and Professional Women.

Most notable of the outstanding women who are taking part in the program are Mrs. Erma Templeman of Springfield, state president; Miss Emily Kneubuhl, executive secretary, National Federation B. & P. W. C., of New York, who will be representing the national federation; Miss Martha Connole of East St. Louis, attorney; Mrs. Mabel Reinecke of Chicago, collector of internal revenue; Mrs. William Gary Brown of Chicago, state chairman of transportation; Mrs. May Wood Simons of Evanston, writer and sociologist.

Mrs. Erma Templeman is presiding and the others are giving the main addresses of the convention. Business is occupying a large part of the convention hours with reports made by the state chairmen of committees, discussions and the election of officers scheduled.

Entertainment and the social side is interwoven with the business sessions, however, in a pattern designed to keep the enjoyment of the delegates at a high mark. Various musical programs have been arranged, stunts will be given by six of the charter clubs, a pageant of figurines will be presented and the delegates will engage in numerous song fests. One of the entertainment features planned is a drive through Evanston conducted by the Chamber of Commerce.
