

Complete Work on Great Federal Road Spanning Country

The national highway, connecting the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, extending 3,205 miles through fourteen states, was recently completed, according to information received by the touring bureau of the Chicago Motor club, from the Department of Agriculture. This road is passable for its entire length, from Atlantic City, N. J., to its western end in Oakland, California. The Federal Government has contributed nearly $18,000,000 to the cost of building this road.

Where once wagon trains crawled laboriously across the untracked plains in deadly fear of hostile Indians, there is now a broad inviting highway nearly all paved, and lined with varied industries which have come into being to make the lot of the motor traveler safe and convenient. He can travel in comfort from the Atlantic Ocean to the Golden Gate, and, in the Ohio Valley, drive along the longest stretch of practically straight road in the country. Farther west, this road touches on the great gold fields of Colorado and California, which had so much to do with the early settlement of the west, and it traverses, also, the Mormon settlement in Utah, the great pioneer agricultural experiment sponsored by Brigham Young.

Less than 14 per cent of the length of the national highway is unimproved. Federal Aid projects on this route include 700 miles of pavement, 725 miles of surfaced road, 132 miles of graded road, and more than four miles of bridges.
