

DEFIANT MOSQUITOES STAGE LAST STAND

Hordes of Little Pests Swarm as Rumbling Dynamite Blows Open Skokie Channels

The defiant hordes of mosquitoes which have been pestering residents of the north shore for several days and the frequent rumbling blasts from the dynamite explosions over in the Skokie area, are all forceful reminders of the relentless warfare which is being waged throughout this area in the determination to exterminate the little pest.

The latter appears to be staging his last stand with renewed vengeance. He apparently realizes he is doomed to go, but is fighting every inch of the ground.

The Chicago Sanitary district is planning to go right ahead with its operations, blasting out the remaining laterals, main ditches and final openings necessary to insure a quick and complete drainage of the Skokie area, without which Superintendent William Edwards, of the North Shore Mosquito Abatement district, says it will be impossible to rid the section of mosquitoes.

Area Is Large

This requires time. The area is large, the work could not be started until late this spring, owing to the flooded Skokie area which prevented the men getting into the field to work, but in which much has already been accomplished during the ten weeks or more they have been operating.

The unusual rains of a week or so ago proved a further handicap and enabled the mosquito tribe to stage another strong comeback.

A. H. Meier, entomologist from Northwestern university is now working three days a week in the district, determining the actual source or breeding places of the mosquito.

Charles Howe, of Kenilworth, has also joined the Mosquito Abatement district force, as "trouble man," so to speak, and as quickly as complaints come in or requests are received he renders immediate aid without it being necessary to take one of the regular foremen and trucks off of the scheduled routes.

The mosquito abatement project, it is pointed out, has been discussed for ten years or more on the north shore, while actual organized work along that line has been under operation for only that many weeks; therefore, the men who are engaged in the fight feel that a little patience will be as essential upon the part of the people, as the continued and determined effort, which the Mosquito Abatement district is rendering, to bring about the final elimination of the foe.
