Northwestern Is Host to Institute of Chemistry

A national summer school of science began at Northwestern university Monday morning when President Walter Dill Scott formally opened the institute of chemistry of the American Chemical society. Eminent scientists from all over the United States and several from Europe are attending sessions which will last for four weeks.

Latest developments in the science of chemistry are being presented by the seventy-five lecturers and instructors who comprise the faculty of the institute. Popular knowledge of the meaning of science is the aim of the institute, according to Dr. Frank C. Whitmore, director, and topics have been chosen to interest the general public.

"The institute has been organized," said Dr. Whitmore, "to make chemists better known to themselves and to the public. It is not designed to direct chemical opinion nor to compete with colleges in the work of education. Several agencies have contributed in recent years toward a better understanding by the layman of the problems of the chemist. This understanding, however, is not what it should be and the institute regards this phase of its work as one of its chief problems."

Miss Grace Margerum, 544 Chestnut street, is visiting relatives in the East. She will be away for three weeks.

Miss Ethel Theis of New Orleans was a recent guest in the home of Miss Grace Margerum, 544 Chestnut street.

John Gukeisen, clerk at the Kenilworth postoffice, returned to his duties Thursday after an annual vacation of fifteen days.
