Cites Chicago as Center of Culture

Editor's note: Appended is a communication published in a recent issue of the Chicago Evening Post over the signature of Harry Edward Freund, 1109 Merrill avenue, Hubbard Woods. It is an exceptionally effective summary of Chicago's justifiable claims to distinction as one of the world's great centers of art and culture. The article is in refreshing contrast to the description of Chicago the world has been accustomed to hearing, especially in recent years.

Chicago's cultural life has never been properly exploited, and now that Chicago is in the international limelight with the Chicago World's Fair Centennial celebration of 1933, it is timely to give a short summary of Chicago's claims as a center of culture.

Among them can be enumerated the three universities, Chicago, Northwestern and Loyola; Field museum. Art institute, Public library and its branches, Crerar and Newberry libraries, Armour Institute of Technology, Historical society and the new projects under way. Rosenwald Industrial museum, Shedd aquarium and the Planetarium.

In the realm of music Chicago has the Civic opera, Ravinia opera season, Symphony orchestra acknowledged by competent critics to be the greatest in this country, Apollo club, Mendelssohn club, singing societies of various nationalities, Christmas Carol civic movement, musical colleges, conservatories and schools. Leading business and public utility corporations have their own bands and choral associations, prominent men are members of the Business Men's orchestra, and also belong to glee and music clubs taking active participation; the Woman's Symphony orchestra is another feature of the musical life of this city.

The marked progress that has been made by the Opera in English society has resulted in the headquarters being transferred to Chicago. The headquarters of the Drama League of America are located in Chicago. The little theater is proving its success and is in full swing in Chicago, with nearly a dozen little theaters, producing the plays of the old and new dramatists, with every encouragement given to the works of aspiring play writers. Chicago has notable poets, composers, authors, artists, many of whom have achieved wide fame.

The public forums have attained their best development in Chicago, and during the season celebrated nationally and internationally known men and women versed in science, art, philosophy, social economy, sociology, psychology and of broad understanding of the problems of today are heard from the platform with an open discussion as an aftermath of each lecture. Chicago has clubs, societies and organizations in which representative men and women take an earnest and sincere interest for the betterment of life.

The fine public parks, drives, boulevards and beaches of Chicago on the lake front and its palatial hotels with every luxury, comfort and convenience add to the fascinating attractions of the wonder city of the world. Chicago is the convention city of the United States, as proven by the increasing number of important conventions held each year.

With public spirit and civic pride, the daily newspapers of Chicago housed in their splendid structures with every up-to-date facility, spread the human gospel of the pulsating and ever energetic, ever dynamic forces that make for the unprecedented and unrivaled growth and progress of Chicago, destined to be the greatest city in the world.

Chicago is the heart of America, and the Chicago World's Fair Centennial celebration in 1933, with the invitation extended with hands across the sea to all the world to unite in the advancement of mankind, Chicago will be the soul of America, blazing the trail for the brotherhood of the peoples of all nations.
