

TO TALK ABOUT STARS

"Heavens and Earth" to Be Subject of Contemporary Thought Lecture

"The Heavens and Earth" will be the subject of the lecture Joel Stebbins, director of the Ashburn observatory and professor of astronomy at the University of Wisconsin, will make before the contemporary thought class at Northwestern next Wednesday. Prof. Stebbins will speak in the afternoon at 2 in the Commerce school on the Evanston campus and at 7 on McKinlock campus. The evening lecture is to be broadcast over WIBO.

"The present conception of the cosmos is that the spiral nebulae are island universes each containing millions of stars like the sun," states Prof. Stebbins. "Our own galaxy or milky way is only one of many such systems and has intermingled among its billion of stars many diffuse nebulae, both bright and dark, also groups and clusters of stars.

"Despite their point-like appearance the stars are known to be spheres of gas, many of them less dense than the earth's atmosphere. By studying them as a population it is possible to select objects which probably represent past and future stages of the sun's condition, and we thus obtain a clue as to the evolution of a star.

"For a dark and planetary body like the earth it is not so easy thus to read its history, but the earth, moon and planets must have come from the material of our central sun. Finally the geological record supplements the evidence from the sky and fixes the probable age of the earth as well as the sequence of changes which have produced the conditions favorable for life on this planet."

Prof. Stebbins will develop these ideas in his lecture.

Kenilworth Garden Club Approaches End of Year

The Kenilworth Garden club held one of its last programs on Friday, September 28, at the home of Mrs. Mark Cresap on Warwick road. This club opens its season of programs in the early spring and continues through the summer only. The next meeting will be the annual meeting with the election of officers.

At the meeting last Friday, in the absence of the president, Mrs. S. D. Flood, the vice-president, Mrs. Edward J. Phelps, presided. The program of the afternoon consisted of a paper by Mrs. Charles Ware on "The Gardens and Flowers of South America." This was a most interesting subject and Mrs. Ware gave her listeners a clear, vivid picture of the profusion of bloom in this land of Argentina. The little side glimpses of private gardens which it was her good fortune to get, made everyone wish to take this South
