California Cities Acclaim Portraits by Antonin Sterba

Comments by critics of art, writing in the Los Angeles and Pasadena papers of the exhibit of portraits by Antonin Sterba, Evanston painter, hold interest to his North Shore friends and art patrons.

Mr. Sterba, who, with Mrs. Sterba and their son Tony, is in Pasadena for the year, on leave of absence from the faculty of the Art institute, Chicago, has had an exhibit of his work in the Jules Kievets galleries at 464 Colorado street, Los Angeles. The California papers have enthusiastically reviewed the exhibit, and among other statements the critics have made the following:

"Two of the most compelling works shown are the portrait of his mother (reproduced here) and the artist's self-portrait. His quiet building up of solid forms in luminous color, always subordinated to the essential aim of presenting a portrait, is very marked in these two works, as is his mastery of brush-draughtmanship. . . . Mrs. Sterba, who is here with her husband, is subject for a full-length portrait. An extremely interesting portrait of a sensitive young girl, Doris Coble, was painted here, and makes fine use of a red dress overlaid with black and gold lace.

Joy in Character Work

"Your true portraitist loves character above all, and so one feels Sterba's joy in doing such a 'straight' piece of character work as the portrait of 'Arne Oldberg,' Evanston musical composer. In the same category belongs the portrait of Frederick Victor Poole, one of the faculty at the Art Institute of Chicago and a well known painter."

The Pasadena paper carries the following items:

"Taking the feature place in the current exhibition of art works which Jules Kievets is showing in his new galleries, is a series of typical portrait studies by Antonin Sterba, the distinguished portrait painter. Noted throughout the east for his work, Mr. Sterba recently came to this vicinity and the first formal opportunity for Pasadenas to view his work is given with this local exhibit.

Evanston's Cultural Center

"Mr. Sterba hails from Evanston, Ill., where his home was a cultural center, where many of the famous figures of art were wont to gather. He has been associated with the faculty of the Art Institute of Chicago and his work has been exhibited in many of the most important galleries of the east.

"Directness and simplicity of expression would seem to be the primary essentials of Sterba studies. A rare quality of humanism is brought to his work, which reflects an artist of fine sensibilities and exhibits a painter of unusual qualities of expression. Breadth marks his sympathies, his canvases reveal; and there is a poetry of feeling in the simplicity which the painter employs to capture his effects.

"Of particular quality in the group which Mr. Sterba shows here is the portrait of his mother. Here is shown a deep regard for humanitarian moods in a characterization that is a work of sterling beauty and dignity. It is fraught with the richest feeling and loveliness and predicates a painter with ideals and sympathies of a high order. . . . A rare charm and simple beauty mark the painting 'Charlotte Andrews' which is one of the outstanding works of the display. A self portrait is a significant contribution. In this something of the interesting personality and character of the painter is revealed with singular ability. Dignity and the quiet forcefulness of the man are presented with definite insistence. The study vies with the best things in the Sterba collection."

In the exhibit Mr. Sterba is also showing portraits of Mrs. Hugh Delmar, the late Wilbur D. Nesbit, the Rev. George Craig Stewart and Mrs. Sterba, all of Evanston.

Mr. and Mrs. Mark Cresap, 535 Warwick road, Kenilworth returned to Chicago, Monday, after spending two months in Baltimore. They will spend a week at the Blackstone hotel before returning to Kenilworth.

Harriet Moore, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Wyatt Moore, 1031 Fisher's lane, will return from Bryn Mawr college next week for the Christmas holidays.
