

Delinquency Among Boys Increasing in Suburban Districts

More cases of crime among boys are coming from the suburban and uptown areas of Chicago, including Evanston, than were registered ten years ago, according to Chicago records.

Dr. Frank Orman Beck of Garrett Biblical institute pointed out the above situation in his address before members of the Theological Faculties Union at their annual meeting held at Hotel La Salle Friday evening. His subject was, "The Moral and Spiritual Welfare of the Chicago Area."

Members of the faculties of Garrett, of the Western Theological seminary of Evanston, and some dozen other seminaries in Chicago and vicinity, attended. It was the union's 42nd meeting. Prof. Frank G. Ward of the Chicago Theological seminary presided.

"Chicago," said Dr. Beck, "is a great laboratory for service and experiment. Each succeeding year witnesses an increasing number of seminary students doing field work in the various parishes of the city. Every seminary in the metropolitan area has one or more courses of study on problems of urban life and adaptation. This is in striking contrast to the situation a decade ago."

Dr. Beck exhibited several maps, one revealing the geographical distribution of boys brought into the boys' branch of the municipal court.

This spot map, compared with one made ten years ago, showed that crime is much more evenly distributed over the city than it was ten years ago. While the major amount of boy delinquency is in unorganized, anti-social areas, there are, he said, more cases coming annually from Hyde Park, Rogers Park, Evanston and other suburban or uptown areas.
