H. M. STANLEY will be observed of all observers when he reaches civilization again. He is without doubt the ablest man who has attempted to oppose or command large numbers of savages who has existed in these modern times. It is even proposed to make a second Warren/Hastings of him and let him consolidate an empire in the heart of the "dark continent." He would no doubt carry out such a commission; if it can be done and it is to be hoped he would do so without oppression and robbery. A full account of his doings since his disappearance from civilised ken will be watched for eagerly and will prove very interesting.

THE hanging of Harvey last Friday was a horrible affair, the hangman was a greenhorn and the whole dreadful operation occupied about twenty minutes. There are some crimes of such a magnitude that it is almost impossible to argue for the complete abolition of capital punishment, but a few such cases such as that of Harvey's should raise such a cry that a more humane method must be adopted or hanging abolished. Meanwhile imagine, if you can, the feelings of young Harvey. His whole family himself excepted slaughtered by his father, who is butchered by a bungling hangman. He probably thinks just now, his escape from his father's pistol was a misfortune and would willingly escape his burden of sorrow and shame.

President Harrison's first message to Congress has appeared and is drawing forth considerable comment. It is said that one Rep. Congressman remarked it sounded remarkably like Cleveland. Among a large amount of matter calling for legislation it would be remarkable if there not some good points and such, no doubt there are. However the clause to which most attention will be directed in this country is the Tariff reform. All eyes will scan it eagerly to see if there be any faint hint of a disposition towards Reciprocity or the breaking down of the protection wall. The Tariff no doubt will be tinkered but as the message says it is a matter of great delicacy. There will be a great outcry as soon as any particular manufacturer is affected and the result will not be of very great importance to the consumer. Meanwhile the overgrown surplus continues to increase and the best efforts of the Government to reduce it without injuring some one industry have failed.

WASHINGTON LETTER

From our regular correspondent.

Washington, Nov. 29, 1889.

The new Congressman has arrived and is arriving. His presence is beginning to be felt in the hotel lobbies and he has made, and will continue to make, the acquaintance of the ever watchful and numerous brigade of hotel "kernels" and "majahs". The number of friends he finds, ready with all sorts of suggestions and information, is far greater than he could have anticipated, and his company is sought by the multitude of men who are willing to extend to him the freedom of the city from the classic shades of Chamberlin's and the buffet in the Shoreham Flats to the Capitol, and from the Capitol clear through down to the Potomac Flats.

In one respect the new Congressman will be disappointed in Washington. Immediately on his election he became the first man in his district. Here in Washington he will find himself without special importance. He can go about unknown and unobserved. He will discover that here, outside of the Departments and the Capitol, "no divinity doth hedge" a Congressman, as such, and in no way can he be so surely subject himself to ridicule as by the putting on of official airs and the assumption of Congressional dignity.

The new Congressman, however, will soon become aware of a notable exception to this general indifference. Occasions may arise when he will find himself besieged and beleaguered by an importunate crowd, far more anxious to obtain his confidence than to keep it—interviewers and reporters willing to write down his slightest words and to consign them and him to fame and history.

It has become the habit of some of the imaginative gentlemen, who profess to communicate the political doings of the Capital to journals at a distance, to exercise their cheap wit and their easy powers of depreciation at the expense of the new Congressman, and in so doing to give greater proof of conceit than sagacity.

But these are, after all, but slight disadvantages, and the new Congressman, who has the right stuff in him, and who is a man of genuine power, will so regard them. In truth, there are many reasons why the new members should be held worthy of high consideration and in reality the position of a new member is one of comparative advantage, for so far as Congress is concerned he has a clear and unwritten record.

Already there is excitement in the air, and one feels the bustle in preparation for Congress, the "Season" and the Holidays. Now where is this more manifest than at the markets of the National Capital, and never more than on a Saturday morning. The markets are then thronged with society dames in tailor-made suits of expensive simplicity, who are out on the hunt for choice tid-bits and fragrant flowers to serve their guests at their Sunday dinners. Epicurean statesmen run in for a look at the game or the pretty girls, for here lovely girls buy their rosebuds and violets to perfume their homes for dear Alphonse's visit, or to carry on their visits of mercy to the hospitals. Alphonse himself saunters in to see if perchance he can catch a glimpse of Arabelle, who looks more fascinating than ever in her stylish morning costume and coquettish round hat. In his search the magnificent Alphonse brushes against the poor little artisan's wife, who, in shabby costume and with slender purse, is searching for the cheapest place where she can find something tempting for her good man, who she hopes will forget this once the way to the back entrance of his favorite barroom. She eyes the great piles of luscious fruit and is sometimes tempted into extravagances for the baby, who relishes such expensive dainties. Then there is the steward, who occupies but little time in giving his order, the caterer, who looks carefully at game and meat, for his customers are epicures, but the boarding-house keeper, communists vis of this city, of Government clerks, buys with dispatch, knows just where the cheapest stall is, and has finished her ordering and is on her way home again before the young housekeeper has decided what of the tempting things to buy and has changed her mind a half-a-dozen times about her Sunday's dinner.

The trouble about electing a Speaker of the House, with so much good material to draw upon, is that to put a good speaker in the chair takes one off the floor, where he is often more needed.

During the past week Commissioner Raum states that 3,935 pension certificates have been signed, and he expects to bring the weekly issue up to 8,000 cases. He says that the work of the office is keeping ahead of the current business, and he thinks that he will be able to largely reduce the number of pending cases.—R.

HOSPITAL REMEDIES

What are they? The growth of intelligence in medical matters has given rise to a demand for a class of genuine, reliable medicine. The opportunity of the ignorant quack, who grew rich curing everything out of a single bottle has passed. To supply satisfactorily this demand this list of remedies has been created. They are the favorite prescriptions of the most famous medical practitioners of the day, gathered from the hospitals of London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. Prescriptions which cost the patients of these specialists from $25 to $100 are here offered prepared and ready for use at the nominal price of one dollar each. Not one of them is a cure all; each one has only the reasonable power of curing a single disease, and each one keeps in contract. Sufferers from Catarrh, Diseased Lungs, Bronchitis, Asthma, Consumption, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Liver and Kidney Complaints, Fever and Ague, Neuralgia, Female Weakness, Leucorrhoea or Nervous Debility, should send stamp for descriptive catalogues to Hospital Remedy Co., 303½ West King St., Toronto, Canada. If your druggist does not keep these remedies remit price and we will send direct.
