THE END OF HIS PULL

By C. B. Lewis

Copyright, 1903, by T. O. McClure

When Terrence O'Geegan opened the Old Home saloon on the corner, with a free lunch lasting all day and a band playing at intervals, it was whispered about that he was a man with a pull. The aldermen of this ward were there, the district leader was there, the captain of that police precinct and his ward men were there.

What had only been whispered on Saturday was talked of openly on Sunday. The Old Home was wide open all day long. One of the aldermen dropped in during the afternoon to get a drink and give his moral support to the defiance of the law, and the patrolman at that beat stood up to the bar with two ward men and drank good luck to Terry, as he beamed on them in a patronizing way. After that it was agreed that O'Geegan was "solid" all around. If a doubting Thomas dropped in as the days went by, the proprietor of the Old Home, if not too busy, would put all his doubts to flight by saying:

"I'm brother-in-law to Alderman Blank. See? I'm cousin to Jimmy O'Toole, who runs this district. Smoke that. The police captain is me wife's own uncle. Chaw that while. As to the ward men and patrolmen, I'm tipping them their drinks to see nothing. It's a combination you can't beat. When anybody starts out to make trouble for Terry O'Geegan he'll buck up 'g'n a stone wall."

The Old Home prospered. It couldn't help but prosper. A saloon with a pull naturally becomes the headquarters of men with a pull and of men who yearn for a pull. It is also a handy place for thirty pedestrians to drop into at any hour in the twenty-four.

Of course there were other saloon keepers who were jealous. They were making up the purses for the district leader, paying blackmail to the police captain and slipping extra dollars to the ward men, and they felt sore because they had to obey the law in a measure. They growled and grumbled and threatened, but when they became annoying the police captain took a little promenade and said to them in turn:

"No more of this or you'll get the grand sky high!"

They shut up. No saloon keeper with an ounce of brains in his head will de-ly a police captain. One tries it now and then, and between the captain and the brewer he is put out of business within a fortnight.

The Old Home had been running two months when a row occurred there one night, and a man had his neck broken. It could easily have been shown at the coroner's inquest that he broke his own neck, but it was not necessary. A ward man and a patrolman fixed all that. They had just dropped in by accident at the moment, and they testified that the deceased pulled a gun and lost his life in the struggle to make use of it.

In a few days a hayseed tried to make the police believe he had been robbed of $300 while admiring the costly mirrors in the Old Home, but they gave him three days in a dark cell and shipped him home a sadder and a wiser man.

Within a year the newspapers briefly chronicled many happenings at O'Geegan's. One or two of them brought O'Geegan before the coroner and the courts. That put him to some little trouble, but his prestige remained undimmed.

It was almost three years from the sunburst opening of his saloon before Terrence O'Geegan found himself in a hole. With the aid of his pull he had successfully defied law and order in every direction. Now and then a friend confidentially advised him to check a bit, but Terry had patted him on the shoulder and told him it was breath thrown away. He was carrying the police and the courts in his vest pocket, and what could happen to him? Something did happen, however, but to this day it is spoken of as an accident or a series of accidents. A stranger entered the place one night and gave Terry some "lip." Terry was "off" that night, and he struck the man a blow that stretched him dead. It so happened that a green patrolman was on the beat that night, and he was idiotic enough to arrest Terry. It also happened that there were four or five men in the place who didn't regard murder as humorously as a game of hopscotch, and they were ready to testify.

"It won't amount to anything, of course," said Terry's friends as he went to see a partridge fall limp and ruffed at the other side of the open.

"I couldn't help it," Joel was explaining apologetically. "He is almost at my feet, and I jest natcherly had to shoot."

"You done well to fetch him," said Obediah. "Pretty heavy charge for short range," he added.

"Like to blow him to ribbons," said Joel, bending critically over the fallen bird. "I cal'late you'll have to wait till I load up again, Obedi!" he said sheepishly.

Obediah was looking through the sunlit woods, and his imagination followed his eyes.

"I should like to fetch one more of them fellers myself," he said. "Beckan the woods is full of 'em. 'Fears like I can hear 'em now drummin' all round old Ring bog."

Joel was reloading the gun. At the other's words he paused and for several seconds looked thoughtfully at the sky.

"Obedi!" he said at length, "let's make an afternoon of it. Let's go pa'tridgin' jest as if that was what we come for. Let's jest forget everything."

out partridges till 5 o'clock. Then we'll come back here."

"Done," said Obediah.

All that afternoon two old men, one short and stout, the other tall and gaunt, stalked through the underbrush of the Pine Hill woods. All that afternoon the woods resounded to the boom of heavy fowling pieces and much cackling laughter, and many an unwary partridge fell victim to two old men who joked and capered like boys.

The shadows were lengthening when Joel pulled out an old silver watch and announced it was time for them to be getting back to the summit. They made the journey thither in silence. Arrived at the open, Obediah sank on a log and burst into deep guttural laughter.

"Tarnation!" he said, holding the inverted powderhorn over his hand. "I haint got nary a charge left."

"Ain't I got jest half a one?" chuckled Joel, turning the black grains from his own horn into his hands. "Obedi!" he went on gently, "I don't believe our gran'paps ever thought we'd carry it so far."

Obediah rose and placed a hand on Joel's shoulder.

"The trouble with our gran'paps," he announced slowly, "was that they never went pa'tridgin' together."

A Fall Diagnosis.
A lady patient entered the consulting room of a physician. The doctor felt her pulse, looked at her tongue and said, "Madam, you should at less and take more out of door exercise."

The advice seemed to be too common for the lady, and she resolved to consult a notorious quack.

"The only true and legitimate manner of accounting for your rare disease," said the quack, "is in the physiological defects of the membranous system. The obtuseness of the spinal abductor causes the cartilaginous compressor to congregate into the diaphragm and thus depresses the diaphragm under the sandbag. Now, if the disease was caused by the vagation of the electricity from the appendages the tympanum would dissolve the spiritual sinetum and the esalicator would ferment in the olfactory, thus becoming identical with the pigmentum. Now, as this is not the case, in order to produce your disease the spinal rotundum must diverge to a point on the elliptical spero. But, as I said before, in order to produce this disease, the ligamentum terns must subtend over the pigitorum to a degree sufficient to dislodge the stericoleolum."

The lady replied: "Yes, doctor, you describe my case exactly. I'd like you to treat me."
