Much favorable comment is being heard concerning the clean condition of Main Street. The Council is to be congratulated on its energy in cleaning up. They have set a good example and Stouffville now has a street to be proud of.

Last week our village was visited by a travelling spectacle peddler. These men, who calling themselves Opticians, go from house to house and with a smooth sounding tale lead their victims into spending several dollars for cheap glasses. Not long ago one of these men, operating in a nearby town, removed the lenses from a woman's glasses and sold them to her for $1.50 she thinking she was getting a superior make of lenses. Eye-sight is something that should not be tampered with. There are plenty of Opticians of good repute without dealing with unknown men often impostors. It is high time a law was passed to prevent this sort of fraud.

It appears that Mr. Herbert Smith has taken objection to an item in our issue of last week. If we caused Mr. Smith any worry or rendered him liable to ridicule among his fellow citizens we regret it very much and apologize to Mr. Smith. The item was intended purely as a joke and was not intended to insinuate that Mr. Smith had committed any moral or legal crimes and we are sure that none of his fellow citizens put the above meaning on it.

Mr. Thos. Johnson who has been working for Monkhouse and Co. for the past three years, went to the hospital on Monday to undergo an operation.

Empire Day will be celebrated May 23rd. Stouffville school and the surrounding schools will participate. Inspector Jordan and others will be present and give addresses at the raising of the valuable Union Jack purchased by the School Board. Further particulars later.

Mr. Jas. Martin, an old Stouffville boy, came to town this week and has been engaged by Mr. Jno. Monkhouse. Jimmie's ability as a coatmaker is well known and Mr. Monkhouse is to be congratulated in securing the services of such a competent tailor.

THOMAS LEOPOLD WILLSON.

Canadian Scientist Was the Discoverer of Cheap Acetylene Gas.

The death of Mr. Willson at the somewhat untimely limit of fifty-five removes one of our eminent Canadian scientists from the arena of research and discovery. He was born at Princeton, Ontario, and was educated at the Hamilton Collegiate Institute, where he displayed the bias toward original research that became strongly developed throughout an active life. His most interesting discovery was a method of producing acetylene gas both cheaply and abundantly, and of utilizing it for illuminating purposes. This discovery was in some measure accidental, but only a trained scientific intelligence could have discerned the practical importance of the outcome of an accidental combination of circumstances.

Acetylene gas had been known as a laboratory product long before Mr. Willson's discovery, but when it was analytically produced the compound used in conjunction with water, potassium carbide or sodium carbide was too limited in quantity to enable the gas to be generated in sufficient abundance for common use. Using an electric furnace to fuse carbon and calcium for some other purpose altogether, Mr. Willson was disappointed with the result which proved to be not what he expected. He threw the hot fused mass into cold water to cool it, and noticed that gas with the familiar garlic odor of acetylene began to pass off into the air. This was the necessary hint to the trained thinker and practised experimenter. He discovered that the calcium and carbon separated in contact with water, and that the carbon of the carbide united with the hydrogen of the water to form acetylene, while the calcium of the carbide united with the oxygen of the water to form lime.

By one of the curious coincidences in the history of research, the same discovery was made almost contemporaneously by Moissan in France; a fact which obscured somewhat the prestige due to Mr. Willson. The latter devoted himself for some time to inventing and perfecting mechanical devices for the practical use of acetylene as an illuminator. Both potassium acid and sugar have been made from acetylene, and so has alcohol, so pure as to cause a surmise whether it might not be produced in sufficient quantities to displace the more or less toxic alcohol of commerce. Toronto Globe.

Perturbed Diner—What on earth is the matter with you this evening, waiter? First you give me the fish, and now you give me the soup. Waiter (confidentially)—Well, to tell the truth, sir, it was high time you had that fish. After the soup it'd have been too late. London Mail.

Quite Satisfied. In old age Boswell said to Johnson, apropos the dictionary, "You did not know what you were undertaking." "Yes, sir," was the answer, "I knew very well what I was undertaking and very well how to do it and have done it very well." London Standard.

Open to Any Offer. Young Man—So Miss Ethel is your eldest sister. Who comes after her? Small Brother—Nobody ain't come yet, but pa says the first fellow that comes can have her. London Stray Stories.

Turtle Eggs. Turtle eggs are an acquired taste, with most people, although they are not so with bears. They have a rough yellow yolk and a white like any other egg, but you can cook them for a year, and the white part will remain liquid. Notice a curious dimple in the side of each one. If you squeeze it out the dimple appears on the other side, and you can never get hold of a turtle egg which hasn't got a dimple in it.

Distribution. "The question of distribution is one of the most serious of our time," remarked the ponderous man. "It is," replied Miss Cayenne. "There is no telling what may happen to the simplest statement of innocent fact after it has been passed around by the cossins."
