I. COMMON WORSHIP. Neh. 8: 1-12; Psalm 122: 1-9; Heb. 10: 19-25.

II. THE MISSIONARY TASK. Matt. 28: 19-20.

Presence. He exhorts, therefore, that with pure hearts, and in confidence, they draw near to God in adoration, and praise, and that they hold with unwavering their good hope of salvation in Christ, for he says, "We can rely on him who gave us the promise." And, "Let us consider, one another in love and good deeds." (Montgomery) "Like many others in the latter part of the first century he believed that the day was great day of the opportunities drawing near."

The Christian church began as a fellowship—a group of disciples, sometimes alone, sometimes with others, gathered about a Master, whom they came more and more to admire and love, until admiration and love grew into worship. It continued, after he was parted from them, as a company of disciples and friends of Jesus, with others whom they drew into their circle, who kept alive his memory, who were conscious of the presence of his spirit with them, and who "continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine (or teaching) and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." Acts 2: 42. From Jerusalem they soon spread abroad, and similar companies of those who believed in Jesus and endeavored to follow his way of life were formed wherever his gospel was preached. The ideals of such a fellowship are present in many passages of the letters of Paul. (See Rom. 15: 1, 2; Gal. 6: 2; 1 Thess. 5: 11-23).

It was from a company of Christian people in Antioch that the first designated missionaries of the cross went forth. That which they had discovered to be of so great value to themselves they desired to share with others. Through them the Holy Spirit spoke, and Barnabas and Saul were sent, "recommended to the grace of God for the work." A true Christian fellowship is inevitably missionary in spirit (Acts 13: 1-3; 14: 26), as was the church in Antioch.

Radio Quit Rumor Started

Paris.—One pleasant report reached the French government recently. The news came to the Ministry of Colonies that St. Paul Island, more commonly known here as Penguin Island, was still standing in the middle of the Indian Ocean, continuing to make a part of the French colonial empire.

Its fate has been worrying M. Tardieu's government and Paris public opinion, since nothing had been heard from St. Paul's inhabitants for more than two months. The suggestion was made that the island had been swallowed up by the ocean as a result of an earthquake.

"Something Subtly Harmful to the Spirit of the Nation Occurs When So Many People Make So Much Money Without Earning it by Productive Labor"

"It was announced by the Stock Exchange that the total market value of all stocks listed on the exchange has declined from about $17,414,600,000 on October 1 to $14,350,400,000 on November 1, a decline of $3,070,200,000. A high record value was reached on September 1st, with $17,933,600,000."

holdings in order to protect their shares. Many business men deserted their normal occupations because they could make so much more so easily by speculation. This must have affected the total of useful production and trade. Such a vast amount of energy and credit utilized in pursuing a phantom cannot be thought of as anything else than economic waste.

"The tangible losses are also important. Something subtly harmful to the spirit of the nation occurs when so many people make so much money without earning it by productive labor. Senses of values are upset. It is perhaps justifiable to defend our material culture on the ground that a competence of material things is necessary, as a basis for leisure, security and appreciation of the finer flowers of human effort."

Britain Out to Regain Trade Lost to U.S. in South America

London.—William Graham, president of the Board of Trade, at a dinner to diplomats of three South American countries, said that it was the immediate British task to regain the former trade position in South America, with all friendliness toward the United States, and to improve on it if possible.

Matabele Up Tree M... Scout F... by Ha... Breadth

London.—One of London's most interesting December visitors is Major Frederick Russell Burnham, once described by Lord Baden Powell as "the greatest scout alive" and "more interesting than any of his heroes of romance."

That morning the Matabele warrior had seen the last great attack of his nation to capture Bulawayo and destroy the hated white man and his utter route and disaster. To avoid the charge of mounted white men he had climbed with his big gun into this tree, and they had swept by him! But straggled the white indunas incautiously chose his particular tree and under which they rested the tired horses and gathered their scattered men.

Neckers who don't want an audience should be careful where they park.

Resting Under Tree
The then Major Baden Powell was resting with his officers under a big tree—where he learned the lesson that a scout must look up as well as down," said Major Burnham, who continued.

Suddenly the thought must have come to this Matabele—I hold the life of any one of these indunas in my hand. They are only a few feet below me, my nation is lost, my rifle is shattered. I will select the most induna, kill him, and then I will die, but the Matabele is a victim by a hair's breadth. Instantly the Matabele lay crumpled the base of the tree. Let us hope that as his soul passed from the black body some angel of solace relieved his despair. For, if he had but known, had he killed that induna he would have destroyed an idea that in due time will assuage even such hatred as he and his people had for the whites.

Scouting will enable his people and all his race to live without humiliation and have their proper place in the sun, yet not destroy the white man.

Difficulties are opportunities. Old schoolmaster used to tell us, but he wisely left us to discover what he meant and to find for ourselves the answer to the question, "Opportunities for what?" He never allowed us to plead the existence of a difficulty as an excuse for leaving anything undone, nor were we permitted to hope to survive our trials in place of overcoming them. Probably this is why so many of his pupils have found a high place in every sphere of life. He was inflexibly opposed to the modern tendency to make everything easy and to banish the need of effort, with its disastrous effect of robbing us of the power to conquer circumstances.

The story of the great service, or rather series of services, of worship conducted by Ezra and Nehemiah (Ezra 6: 1-18) is full of interest. The Bible was not in those days, as it is now, in every man's hand. Many of the people of Jerusalem and Judah were ignorant of their own history, and their own laws. Ezra had come to them from the schools of Babylon as a teacher. Now to the assembled multitude he reads in the book of the law, and his companions help him in explaining what the people could not themselves understand. There was, therefore, in the service, reading of the scriptures, instruction, thanksgiving, confession, the celebration of holy days, and in the intervals, remembrance of the poor.

Psalm 122 is one of the so-called Pilgrim Psalms, composed for, and sung by, pilgrims on their way to the city of Jerusalem to take part in the annual festival. The psalm uses fine expression to the gladness of these holiday expressions, and the warm affection of the Jewish people to the city and the sanctuary. The word "compact," in verse 3, should rather be translated, "federate." Jerusalem was the federate, or federal city, belonging equally to all the tribes and people of Israel. That seems to have been in the mind of David when he made the Jebusite stronghold, and made it his capital city, 2 Sam. 5: 6-9. The coming up of the tribes to the city is a testimony to their unity, as is also the high courts, the "chambers of judgment." Therefore, will the pilgrims pray for the peace of Jerusalem, for their own and their brethren's sake, and for the sake of their common sanctuary.
