The Loose Foot-Brace.

With his gold-rimmed glasses, expensive clothes and carefully polished shoes, the visitor from the city rather looked down on the old fisherman and his boat. He took a wide step into the middle of the boat to avoid the none too clean sides. But his heavy step set the boat rocking, and he took a second unsteady step quickly forward. His foot caught a loose foot-brace, which tripped him, and he fell forward, striking his face upon a thwart, breaking his glasses and causing his nose to bleed a little. After expressing his anger with some violence, the man noticed the loose brace, lying in the bottom of the boat.

"It's a stupid piece of business," he exclaimed, "to have loose sticks like that in a boat!"

"That's a pretty useful little piece of wood," said the old boatman calmly. He had sprung forward to help the fallen man, but he was clearly offended by his language and manner. "You'll find how good a thing it is when you want to row yourself anywhere."

"Every stick that's needed in a boat should be firmly fastened," retorted the hurt and angry man.

"If that stick had been sold," said the boatman, "you might have topped clean overboard into the lake."

The man took his seat with an impatient gesture, thrust out the oars, swung them back and gave a vigorous pull. His feet, having no brace, slid along the bottom of the boat; the man slipped from his seat and fell over backward. The boatman's boy, who had looked on with sympathy when the man first fell, now laughed outright, and even the old boatman grinned a little.

"If you'd put that brace you kicked aside in them cleats at your feet, you'd have some comfort to your rowing and make some progress," said the boatman.

The shamed man now heeded the old boatman, put the brace in the cleats that suited the length of his legs. Now he had a firm support for his feet, and he could throw his weight safely upon his oars.

It is so with many of the laws of life. Moving about in our ignorance and foolish impatience, they trip us up. Hurt and angry, we cry out against them and wonder why they exist. But when we recover our balance, observe life's rules and put these laws in their places, we find in them the very power by which real progress is made. "But as for me, my feet were almost gone; my steps had well-nigh slipped," says the Psalmist in the Seventy-third Psalm. This verse and the whole Psalm is a commentary upon this experience of the man with the loose foot-brace.

SAVED BABY'S LIFE

Mrs. Alfred Tranchemontagne, St. Michel des Saints, Que., writes: "Baby's Own Tablets are an excellent medicine. They saved my baby's life and I can highly recommend them to all mothers." Mrs. Tranchemontagne's experience is that of thousands of other mothers who have tested the worth of Baby's Own Tablets. The Tablets are a sure and safe medicine for little ones and never fail to regulate the bowels and stomach, thus relieving all the minor ills from which children suffer. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25¢ a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A Violin's Music.

Gently—softly—
As the breath of a babe.
Now like the ripple of brooklet,
Slipping, gurgling,
Over tiny pebbles,
Dawn sky—a rosy hue,
Vibrating wings of butterflies
Feeding on sweet flowers,
A thrush's lullaby,
Dainty fouch of a mother's hand,
Beauty—love—joy—
God's gift to us.

"Leave it to Pink."

The wise cow-pony is a familiar figure in fiction, film and fact; but in Mrs. Mary Roberts Rinehart's recent account of her participation in a round-up we are able to view him from a new angle, that of a woman rider, new to his duties and hers. At six o'clock they were off.

"Underneath me," she records, "Pink moved sedately along. He had the air of an old hand at the business, and of being slightly bored at the preliminaries. It was a fine morning; the sun warmed my back, and Pink's delicate tread was like a rocking chair beneath me. I yawned. And then somehow or other I was riding down a valley with Irving, and Irving was glancing right and left for cattle, and Pink was gathering himself together and getting ready. Ready for what?"

"What am I to do?" I inquired in a thin voice.

"You just sit tight," said Irving comfortably, "and let Pink do it. He knows. Only watch him when he whisks. That's all."

The "whirling" did not come until four hours later, when a bunch of cattle were to be headed off. In a second Pink started for them, and then and there did I give such an exhibition of pulling leather as I hope not to give again. He whirled and ducked; he flew and leaped; and to his back, helpless, I clung and prayed. And he did the job. He rounded up that stampeding herd and pointed it where it should go. And when it was over I let go the saddle-horn, took my first breath in five minutes and straightened my hat. But the worst was yet to come. It was in a dry creek bed, like a canyon. Pink slid and scrambled down into it, and between its high, unclimbable banks we moved along.

And there, without warning, we came upon an enormous bull. He looked as large as a locomotive, and he was barring the way with his wives and children. The moment he saw me he lowered his head and began to paw the ground. I attempted to turn Pink round, but he refused to turn. Instead he tried to make for the creature, and it pawed the ground again and stared at me with red and horrible eyes. I moistened my lips and spoke to it in a small, faint voice.

"Go on!" I said. "Get along there!"

"Just an inch nearer!" said the bull, in effect. "Just an inch!"

"Irving!" I called feebly; but he did not hear, and Pink was tugging at the bit, and the cows had set up a kind of melancholy chorus. I tried other tactics; I spoke gently and kindly.

"Go along!" I said. "Nice old fellow! Go along like a good boy!"

I even whistled—it had no appreciable effect on the bull, but Pink took it as a signal and dashed at him. And the creature instantly threw up his tail and started off! Some few minutes later I rode up out of the creek bed, driving my monster and his harem before me. And Irving, waiting on the bank, surveyed my catch with approval.

"Made quite a pickup," said he. "Took a little time," I said easily. "That creek bed's a poor place to work."

WAS FAMOUS SPY "MADAME X" DURING WAR.

Above is Marie Coenegracht, perhaps the most famous and beautiful of all allied spies during the great war. Certainly none were more daring. Time after time she outwitted the Germans until she became internationally famous, and headed the Belgian espionage system behind the German lines. Finally, planning one of the biggest coups of the war, she was betrayed, arrested, and subjected to cruelty and indignities. She is starting life anew, with her husband, who was also taken prisoner and wounded during the war, at Cooksville.

GOOD NEWS FOR RHEUMATIC PEOPLE

Now Known That This Trouble Must be Treated Through the Blood.

The most a rheumatic sufferer can hope for in rubbing something on the tender, aching point is a little relief. No lotion or liniment ever did or ever can do more than this. The rheumatic poison is rooted in the blood. To get rid of it you must treat it through the blood. Any doctor will tell you that this is true. If you want something that will go right to the root of the trouble in the blood, take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The whole mission of this medicine is to purify and enrich the blood, and when they do this all blood troubles, including rheumatism, disappear. Among those who have proved the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is Mrs. Annie Wright, Woolchester, Alta., who says: "I was a sufferer from rheumatism for six years, and during most of that time my life was one of misery. I tried several doctors, and many remedies recommended, but never got more than temporary relief. The trouble seemed to affect my whole system and I was badly rundown and suffered from headaches as well. Finally I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and through these I found complete relief and to-day I feel like a new person. I can therefore strongly recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to anyone suffering as I did from this trouble."

You can get these pills from any medicine dealer, or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A Strenuous Baby.

Baby elephants, as circus-goers know them, are such amiable and engaging infants that it is interesting and surprising to view one in a quite different aspect. Mr. Wynant Hubbard, while securing wild animals in Africa for zoos and menageries, had a nearly fatal encounter with a lively six-year-old.

"We had killed one elephant," he records, "and his dying calls had summoned another, a beautiful specimen, six or seven years old, in perfect health. The only way you can catch one of these beasts alive is for some one to grab him by his tiny tail and twist it while the natives jump on him, looping big ropes around all four of his legs."

"I was the one who jumped and grabbed this elephant by the tail. He started jumping, twisting, shaking and kicking, trying to get me. I was like the man who grabbed the bear by the tail. I had to hold on. I went spinning about in the air, bumping against his hide, bounced up in the air like a rubber ball every time he kicked at me, and tossing around generally like a toy balloon in a gale. I owed my life to having a strong grip."

"Finally, the natives got him tied down. I was all in when I let go. They tied him just in time."

Our Remarkable Brains.

The brain is a curious organ. It is almost insensible to pain, for one thing, and it is much less subject to disease than the rest of the body is. Even when there is definite brain trouble, it is often impossible to detect in the brain tissue any alteration of substance. It is also very difficult to exhaust the brain by intellectual work, provided the other organs are in a healthy condition. Finally, the brain does its work on an exceedingly small amount of sustenance. Sir Arthur Keith, the British surgeon, has put the fact very graphically by saying that the energy contained in an ounce of sugar would be enough to produce one of Shakespeare's plays if it should find its way to a brain as gifted as Shakespeare's was.

EASY TRICKS A Forced Choice

A pack of cards is handed to a spectator with the request that he count them, dealing them in a neat heap on the table. He is next to deal the cards into four heaps. He selects one of the heaps and the trickster tells him the name of the card which is uppermost on that heap. This effective trick requires no skill—in fact, the spectator does most of the work.

The performer, at the beginning, notices which card is fourth from the top. When the cards are counted, the order of the cards in the pack is reversed and this card comes fourth from the bottom. When the cards are dealt into four heaps, it is an easy matter for the trickster to observe on which heap the card which was fourth from the bottom falls. He asks the spectator to select any two of the heaps. If one of these includes the selected card, well and good. If it does not he says: "Now select one of the other remaining heaps." If this is the one he desires, the trick is all but completed. If it does not, he says "Only one heap remains" and completes the trick. This stunt of "forcing a choice" is very useful in many tricks of magic.

Wedding Rings of Old of Agate and Iron.

While sentiment has demanded that wedding rings should be made of the most precious and durable of metals, wives of the ancient Romans sometimes wore bands of iron as a token of ownership or fidelity, and some of the earliest rings were of agate. Since platinum has superseded gold in value, rings of this metal are common.

Gold rings were worn by the Egyptians as early as 2000 B.C., but they had no matrimonial significance. The symbols indicated orthodoxy in the households of the early Christians, and finger rings were first used as seals to identify papers.

In America, rings were not always popular. The Puritans believed that they were too suggestive of charms.

Music Engenders Ideals.

It is never too late to learn to appreciate music. But without doubt the best time is in youth. It is during youth that the tastes are formed. If the children are developed for the lighter order of desires that is the way they will grow up. It is never wise to rush a child.

The idealistic home is the home where the parents keep their minds steadfastly on the beautiful things of life. If the parents are God-fearing, beauty-loving, patriotic, generous, sacrificing souls, the children are more apt to be that way, whereas if they are vulgar, selfish individuals, it is more likely that the children will tend in that direction.

And so it is with music. Begin young, show the way, love the art, let the little ones hear lovely music, and that is how they will develop in maturity. If you begin early enough and persist long enough we shall succeed in making Canada a more desirable place to live in.

Music and musicians and music loving people are a great asset to any community. Music engenders ideals. Ideals are what we need more and more in this young country.

A Profit Four Ways.

Some people make chicken-raising pay; others find it a losing venture. But hardly any one of whom we have heard ever did so well with them as the boy, Dawkins by name, of whom the Cleveland Plain Dealer tells:

Some one asked his father whether chickens really paid.

"They pay my son," said the old man. "I bought him the chickens; I supply the feed; I buy the eggs from him, and he eats them."
