MEN AND WOMEN OF TO-DAY

A Scot's Prank on a "Brither"

The latest story about Sir Harry Lauder concerns another famous Scotsman, Lord Dewar.

Lord Dewar had Sir Harry staying with him for a fortnight. When the comedian was leaving his host presented him with six valuable homing pigeons as a farewell present. Lord Dewar's pigeon lofts are world-famous. But he cautioned Sir Harry to keep the birds penned for a fortnight, otherwise they might fly back. Sir Harry waited the prescribed time and a week longer, then he opened his loft, thinking it would be safe. Immediately the birds rose up and away for their old home. Even a Scot can't get the better of a "brither frae the Land o' Caledon."

From Poverty to a Palace

The miracles of the Arabian Nights are not finished. I have just heard of a Russian doctor, living in poverty, who wandered into a cinema and saw the film of the coronation of the new Shah of Persia. He thought the Shah's face was familiar, and some days later recollected he had met him when the Shah was serving as a private soldier in the Russian army. He wrote to the new Shah, and some weeks later received a letter appointing him Court Physician to the "King of Kings," and asking him to come immediately to Teheran, the Persian capital. Who said, "Put not your trust in Princes?"

The Old Gate

It was a boisterous day, the wind was tossing the tree tops into billows over the hills of the evergreen isle. A thick, cold mist was blowing, white caps rode the waves of the lake and crows shrieked from the top of an old fir tree, my dog sat shivering at my feet. "Let's be off to the woods," Beau said.

The road ran up a gravel hill, then wound along through the woods, hospitable maples in their gay spring greens spread their arms in welcome, dignified fir wearing buttonhole bouquets of dogwood blossoms stood like ushers, frisky willows, nodding ferns and drifts of blue alder smoke lured me on. After about a mile the road turned off mysteriously into the woods. I stopped to listen to water trickling down through the ferns. Beau had chased off into a thicket. Then it was that I noticed the old gate. It stood open leaning back against the bushes. The road followed the ravine down the hill in a persuasive way, but I did not venture in. I leaned on the old gate while I waited for Beau.

The wind had calmed into a breeze that set all the trees to singing and the mist had begun to lift. I heard a door slam down by the water's edge and a boy whistling the ring of an ax echoed through the woods. A man called, then a woman's voice singing floated up to me with a message of content.

The next time I saw the old gate, the maples had changed their gowns of green to ones of soft yellow, fir were wearing dark velvet coats with buttonholes of rich red burs that the dogwoods had planned to their lapels. Adventurous sunbeams sifted through the trees and shadows lingered at the curves. The gate was closed, but I did not feel forbidden, for its weather-beaten boards hung from their hinges with the grace of an unspoken welcome.

Once again I passed that way. A battered car came chugging up the hill. The boy was driving, his dog sitting in the seat beside him, in the back seat sat the man and the woman, contented, serene.

And so the gate still calls me. Some time I shall wander down that ferny drive, sure to find a smile and a welcome hand to greet me. There will be flowers, there will be apple trees; and a tea-kettle will be singing in the kitchen.

Collapse of Douglas

A good story is being told in film circles of Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford and King Alfonso of Spain. The film couple were invited on their European tour to meet the King, and Douglas, in particular, was determined to make a good impression. He prepared in advance a pretty speech about American and Spanish friendship, and had it ready to trip off his tongue, when, to his amazement, the King stepped forward with, "How do you do, Mr. Fairbanks? How's Fatty Arbuckle?"

King Alfonso, who visits England nearly every year, is almost as keenly interested in films as he is in tennis.

Good-Bye, Melba!

Recently Dame Nellie Melba, easily the most popular of prime donne, sang her last songs in public to a London audience. She made her first appearance as an opera-singer at Brussels thirty-nine years ago. Her popularity is almost as much due to her unflinching kindness of heart as to her wonderful voice, and by her retreat Australia loses her best-known citizen.

The story about Melba which I like most, runs thus: She was living in a hotel on one of her tours and sat down one morning to practise. A little boy happened to be in the room with his mother, and when the singer's liquid notes trilled out he jumped up with an excited, "Hist, mummy, birdie!" Melba regards that as the greatest compliment ever paid to her voice.

Your Ear Sight

If, for any reason, the authorities forbade music in cinemas, the film industry would die. Attendances would dwindle, not because the absence of music made for dullness, but because the pictures would "fatten" and lose "life." We should not be able to see them, without music, a quarter as well as we do now, with music.

It is a scientific fact that we assist our hearing with our eyes, and assist our sight with our ears. Do we not, when we wish to "listen hard," screw our eyes up? The act is involuntary, and has the effect of sharpening the hearing.

The reverse effect is obtained when our ears take in sounds. Our sight is quickened. By actual experiments it has been proved that those who could not read printed matter without spectacles have been able to do so, unaided, when music was played. The violin, on its high notes, is the instrument which produces the greatest increase in vision. Thus music in cinema, even if it is selected to "fit" particular scenes, is really to help us to "see."

Cork is Cooked

Cork is the bark of an evergreen tree which grows in Southern Europe. The bark is of great thickness and gets thicker every year, one layer forming over the other.

After about ten years the bark falls off naturally, but for commercial purposes the outer layers are stripped before this and are stripped again every eight or ten years.

The bark is removed by making a deep cut in the tree, and then slicing off slabs with a curved two-handled knife. These pieces are boiled or steamed for an hour, in order to get rid of certain substances in the bark, and also to decrease its size. The pieces are then scraped and finally pressed flat by machinery. The cork is then ready for the market.

The corks that are used in bottles are remade by machinery, and the waste helps to make floorcloth.

Holiness

A white bird in a dark-boughed tree Gave to the rain-wet wood A touch of holiness, a place Where God had stood.

The weeping greenness of the leaves Pooled in the heavy air, And hung, forgetting to fall, since He Was standing there.

And the dark boughs bent, and swept together Hushed words in an undertone, Talking of one bright, beautiful moment Long after the bird had flown.

—Marion Peacock.

Motorcycle Piles Up Big Mileage in Recent Economy Test

Witnessed by representatives of the press and members of the Richmond, Va., Motorcycle Club, a new Harley-Davidson Single recently hung up a highly impressive record for economy in fuel consumption. A strictly stock machine, with no previous preparation, other than the sealing of the gasoline tanks, proceeded to pile miles upon miles until it reached a grand average of 120.5 miles per American gallon.

Commenting on this, Walter Andrews, Toronto distributor for the Harley-Davidson line, stated: "While economy tests are very interesting and impressive, the real test of any motorcycle is in its every day constant use. Under such conditions the Harley-Davidson Single is piling up an impressive record, eighty miles to the American gallon and 100 miles to the Canadian gallon and better being the average report." Because of this, the motorcycle has found its place in modern business, and ever increasing number of stores and business establishments are installing motorcycles for rapid delivery service.

GIRLHOOD DANGERS

Come Through a Weakening of the Blood—A Tonic is Needed.

In their early teens it is quite common for girls to outgrow their strength, and mothers should carefully watch the health of their daughters at this time. It is when the strength is sapped by rapid growth that anaemia develops. The first signs may be noticed by peevishness, languor and headaches. The face grows pale, breathlessness and palpitation become apparent, with low spirits and depression.

Neglected anaemia often leads to a decline, but if you see that your daughter's blood is enriched, there need be no cause for anxiety. The finest blood-builder ever discovered is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They will build up your girl's health and ensure for her healthy womanhood. In proof of this Mrs. George Justason, Black's Harbor, N.B., says: "I think Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a wonderful medicine. My daughter, Margaret, was in such a badly run down condition that we feared she was going into a decline. Her face was pale, the least exertion would leave her breathless and she suffered from headaches. She had no appetite and lost a lot in weight. Up to the time we began giving her Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, no treatment had helped her. But thanks to the use of this wonderful medicine she is again well and strong, showing no signs of the trouble that had so weakened her."

In all troubles due to weak, watery blood, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will be found a reliable remedy. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 50 cents a box by The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Still, Small Voice

The voice of common sense, as well as of conscience, is not always assertive above the strident sounds of the day's work, the importunities of social claims or business. We have to learn to listen to what our better more deliberate judgment is ready to tell us, even though it speaks in a whisper, not in a shout.

In fact, the greater, purer inspirations of our lives never come moistly. They take possession of our horizons almost imperceptibly, like tides of a peaceful coast or clouds of a quiet sundown. We receive these ennobling and fortifying impulses, these clearer indications of the way to take, when we withdraw to the deep, intimate recesses of our being. It is there that we meet our real selves and encounter instincts that are shy and usually inarticulate, ready to be put to flight by churlish, inhospitable contacts.

As music cannot live on terms of fellowship with noise, so the essential refinement of a nature cannot survive constant discouragement. The inward mentor that is ready to show us the things in life that are not merely most beautiful but most sensible will cease to function as a muscle atrophies if we never give it anything to do. If we never listen when it speaks, if we rush onward in a heedless and belligerent course, never pausing to listen to that most precious source of counsel that was given us when the soul was bestowed upon the body for a faithful, lifelong comradeship.

What is the use of the still, small voice that is within us if we never heed?

Early Railways in Canada

On April 16, 1853, the Toronto Locomotive Works completed the first locomotive built in Canada. It was named the "Toronto." On June 12, 1853, the Northern Railway was opened from Toronto to Bradford. On July 18, 1853, the Grand Trunk Railway, to Portland, Me., was opened. The Great Western Railway was opened from Niagara River to Hamilton, on Nov. 1, 1853; from London to Windsor, on Jan. 27, 1854; from Hamilton to Toronto, on Dec. 3, 1855. The first passenger train, went from Montreal to Toronto on Oct. 27, 1856. The railway from Port Hope to Lindsay was opened on Dec. 30, 1857. The railway from Goderich to Fort Erie was opened on May 28, 1858.

Living By His Taste

Some boiling water, a little tea, and a china cup—with these a man can earn £2,000 a year, says an English writer.

Every day, in the City of London, near Mincing Lane, where hundreds of chests of tea are bought and sold, men are busy tasting samples.

The sampling and tasting is carried out in this manner: A sample of the tea is taken, and a preliminary opinion is based on the appearance of the leaf and aroma while dry.

Then tea to the weight of a sixpence is put into a tea-tasting pot made of the best white china. This is filled with boiling water and a china lid put on. For five minutes the tea is left to brew, and then, by almost inverting the pot with the lid still on, the tea is strained out into a china cup.

The taster now has two things before him, the tea itself, and the leaves on the lid. In this state the leaves are known as the infusion.

If the infusion is light and bright in color it is a sign that the tea is good. Dark-brown leaves are a sign that, generally speaking, the tea is inferior.

As regards to the tea itself, the expert looks at it for color. The liquid may be what is known as "coloring" tea, in other words, of good color which, when blended later with a tea of good flavor but thin in appearance, will impart the color wanted.

Finally comes the actual tasting—just one teaspoonful.

Though the whole process boils down to personal judgment, the years of experience behind sound tasters is such that three or four men examining the same sample would more than likely agree within a farthing a pound as to the worth of that particular consignment.

Where Go the Boats?

Dark brown is the river,
Golden is the sand,
It flows along forever,
With trees on either hand.

Green leaves a-floating,
Castles of the foam,
Boats of mine a-boating—
Where will all come home?

On goes the river
And out past the mill,
Away down the valley,
Away down the hill.

Away down the river,
A hundred miles or more,
Other little children
Shall bring my boats ashore.
From "A Child's Garden of Verses,"
by Robert Louis Stevenson.
