Notes and Comments
55 persons on the old age pension in Ontario County passed away in 1932, and there are now 600 drawing the pension, which is a slight decrease from a year ago, making a saving in dollars of eleven thousand.
There are 83 cemeteries in Ontario County, according to a report placed before the Ontario County Council, at Whitby last week.
A total of 67,309 persons in Canada were in receipt of Old Age Pensions on June 30, 1932, according to a return issued by the Department of Labour.

Old Age Pension For Everybody Over 70
Toronto Saturday Night, a super-far financial paper, throws out a new thought on Old Age Pensions, which is worthy of careful analysis. A pension for everybody over 70 years old would be very little more difficult to pay than the present system is. Here is what Saturday Night says:

Ten Years Ago
Facts and News Gleaned from The Tribune Files of November 28, 1922
W. S. Cook moved into his fine new house in the west end.

Rev. Dr. Long of Windemere, Ave; Toronto, preached for the Methodist Church anniversary.
Three Clydesdale colts arrived from Scotland for Graham Bros., Clarendon.

Isaac Barkey, the foundryman, man has a new whistle, its blown by steam, and rests on the foundry roof.

Although there has been a light fall of snow, farmers were plowing on Nov. 23.

75 friends assembled at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. March, Bethesda, to bid them farewell on their removal to Aurora.

Mrs. F. W. Silvester is in Uxbridge owing to the serious illness of her mother.

Stouffville market:—butchers' cattle 7 to 8c, calves 4 to 5c, hogs $10.25, eggs 60c dozen and butter 22c pound.

The Mennonite Church was taxed to its seating capacity, at the opening of a revival service, conducted by the pastor, Rev. W. M. McGuire, and Elder C. Raymer at the altar.

Mrs. Chris. Raymer, Main Street, was given a surprise party by her sisters, in honor of her birthday. Six sisters and two sister-in-laws, were present, including Mrs. Noah Stouffer, Mrs. A. D. Stouffer, and Mrs. J. Bruce, Mrs. J. Bowdway and Elizabeth and Adelaide Stouffer.

The police are in town daily in connection with the hundred thousand dollar robbery from the Canadian Bank of Commerce. The bank then known as the Standard was entered on the night of October 24, 1922, the robbers making away with $113,000 in cash and securities. Approximately $12,000 was taken in cash, while bonds totalled over $90,000.

Brillinger Bros. (Harry and Walter) produced a hundred tons of cabbage this year, and sold the output at an average price of $11 per ton, with the exception of a few car loads which are in storage in Toronto. The Brillinger boys also turned out 1500 bags of carrots.

THE DESERTED HOME

Kitchener and London divide honors this year in the poetry contest held under the auspices of the Western Ontario Branch of the Canadian Authors' Association. William Wright of the Kitchener-Waterloo High School won the first prize of a gold medal for his poem, 'The Electronic Beat,' but what is of chief interest to Tribune readers is that Lloyd Stevenson, won second with his poem, 'The Deserted Homestead.' Lloyd is a son of Mr. Sam Stephenson of London, and a nephew of Mrs. Alf. Hooyer of Stouffville. Lloyd is a pupil of London south Collegiate, and was presented with a silver medal for his prize. The poem is well done, and runs as follows:

"The Deserted Homestead"
The house is old;
A place of spectral fear,
Long since the foot of man
Has echoed here.
These crumbling walls
Once witnessed joy and tears;
Now they commune with ghosts
Of other years.
Once, long ago,
These broad fields knew the plow;
Weeds, unmolested, grow
Upon them now.
Flowers once bloomed thick
Upon this happy sod,
The dooryard now is quick
With goldenrod.
Children once played
Around this lowly door,
And tripped with laughing eyes
Across the floor.
Sorrow dwelt here;
Here there were death and birth;
Here there was many a tear,
Here careless mirth.
But that is past,
The place is cold and still;
Dust and decay have leave
To work their will.

Old Age Pension For Everybody Over 70
The proposal for a revision of the terms of the national Old Age Pensions Act makes it timely to inquire whether the concept of the nature of governmental old age pensions upon which this country has operated ever since there were such things is a necessary and inevitable concept, and whether there may not be a better one. It is a fundamental element in the existing Pension Act that the recipient must not be in receipt of an income of more than $365 a year and must not have effected any assignment or transfer to reduce his income to that level. Is this a desirable limitation?

The enforcement of this limitation requires a great deal of expenditure by public authorities and causes a great deal of hard feeling. It is largely left, moreover, to the local authorities, who have the least reason for doing it efficiently because they contribute only the smaller part of the pension, and naturally approve of a payment which helps business in their territory and may even diminish the burden of local relief. Enforcement is therefore, in all probability, very unevenly and in places very inefficiently performed.

It is perfectly obvious, moreover, that enforcement of the limitation must certainly tend to promote, if not evasive transfers of property (which are supposed to be barred) at any rate unnecessary and extravagant consumption during the years immediately preceding qualification. The state can inquire whether I have given something away; it is not empowered to inquire whether I have blown something in. The net result of the limitation is to ensure that the benefits of old age pensions shall be confined to two classes—the definitely unlucky, and the definitely improvident. The provision is absolutely debarré, and the unlucky are subject to an insulting investigation to make sure that they are really as unlucky as they claim.

Discouraging Saving by Poor People
Would any serious evil be caused by paying $240 a year (the amount ought really to be adjusted from time to time with the cost of living) to everybody who has passed the age of seventy and has the qualifications of residence and good behavior? No inquiry for anything but an age certificate would then be necessary. The total number of persons over seventy in Canada is not reported by the available census figures, but there are only $840,000 over sixty, and the number over seventy can hardly be a third of this. The present recipients are 66,000 in number, but they would probably be 1,000,000 if all the Provinces participated. Abandonment of the income limitation would possibly double the number of recipients in whatever territory were involved, and might raise the present 14-million dollar bill to as much as 48 millions, if all the Provinces came in, against which there would be a substantial reduction in administration charges. That some of the recipients would be in no need of the pension does seem to be a fatal objection the less they are in need of it the more certain it is that they will be paying for both their own pension and a lot of other people's out of their contribution to the taxes. Even the present Act does not require a pensioner to be utterly destitute; it allows him to have $125 a year before it begins cutting down his pension. Why a man who has saved himself an annuity of $125 should be entitled to $240 a year from the state, while his neighbor who has saved himself an annuity of $365 should be entitled to nothing is not very clear. What is clear is that the situation does little to encourage the purchase of small annuities, which, curiously enough, the Dominion Government tries to sell.

SAW COW FOR FIRST TIME

Hundreds of Boston school children saw a cow last week for the first time, and were properly impressed. A questionnaire, circulated in the schools, disclosed that 3,500 children never had seen a cow. Many had no idea that milk originated anywhere but in bottles. "This can't go on," said Dr. John P. Sullivan, Supervisor of school Health Education. He ordered a cow and a calf produced. So Daisy and her daughter Jessie visited the William Blackstone school. Open-mouthed, 1,000 youngsters watched a man sit on a stool and, with nothing up his sleeve, produced a bucket that overflowed with milk. "It's like a faucet, but it ain't," explained one youngster to another, less sophisticated. A little girl, her eyes bright with wonder, walked up to the man, "Mister," she asked, "Is that the cow that jumped over the moon?"
