- MAPLE SUGAR TIME
- The infallible sign of the return of spring is the running of the sap in the maple sugar trees. To the thousands of farmers who own sugar bushes the flow of sap means, however, something more than the dawn of spring; it means hard cash. The average Canadian revenue from maple products during the last five years was over $5,000,000. The maple sugar production of Canada is worth almost twice the honey production. The first detailed published account of maple sugar production in Canada is that which was submitted to the Academy of Sciences in Paris in 1755 by Dr. J. F. Gaultier, a physician who came from France to Quebec in 1742. It is commonly stated that the Indians made maple sugar before the white man came. Dr. Gaultier in his article of 1755, however, says that it was the French who taught the Indians to make maple sugar. However that may be, the production of sugar from maple sap in Canada certainly goes back a long way. More than one-third of the Canadian crop of maple products goes into tobacco. About 40 per cent. of the crop is exported to the United States, mostly for use in flavouring tobacco. The larger proportion of maple sugar and maple syrup is in demand for household use. Ice cream makers buy large quantities of these products for flavouring purposes.
- MUST CRACK STONE FOR DAILY BREAD
- The days of the old stone pile, familiar to our older readers, may soon be upon us again. In Markham Township it is proposed to canvas the township for all the available stone lying in fence corners and elsewhere, and put the unemployed to work on it.
- Up to the present time the municipality has spent several thousand dollars this year on relief, but has received nothing in return from the recipients. The move is considered a good one from the angle that if one is required to spend several hours on the stone pile to earn his living, the relief will not be so sought after. Broken stone for use on the roads will be valuable material.

"HAPPINESS"

[At the school oratory, the quality of the matter delivered by the various speakers is worthy of reproduction, hence The Tribune will endeavour to secure for its readers, at least the papers of the prize winning contestants, and publish one each week. Following is the address made by Miss Luella Gayman which was awarded first place among the seven contestants.]

"To-night I am going to speak to you about something that is of vital importance to all of us, that is "Happiness".

Everyone wants to be happy. Everyone is striving for happiness, whether they are conscious of it, or not. It is everyone's right to be happy.

There were plenty of evidences which show that we are meant for happiness. Are you happy,—if not—why not?

We have seen many painful examples during the past months of the failure of money to produce happiness. We have seen that a fortune without a man behind it does not stand for much.

To get the best examples of this—the failure of money to produce happiness—you must go back with me to the year 1929, when that tragedy in stock markets occurred. You will remember of a number of rich men who were in positions of great responsibility and trust at the beginning of the financial panic some have committed suicide, others have died from the affects of the disgrace which they brought upon themselves, and upon their families.

—still others have suffered tortures, not so much because of their own wrong doing as from fear of disclosure. Yet these men were supposed to possess the things which make men happy. They had what the whole world is seeking so strenuously to-day—money! They lived in palatial homes and were surrounded with luxuries, yet the moment misfortune came their way what they called "Happiness" fled as though it had the wings of a bird. Almost in the twinkling of an eye their foundations slipped from under them, their reputations vanished and they found that their "Happiness" had flown with their reputations. Happiness is not such a transient visitor as that. Real happiness is not a fluttering, fly-away un-reality. It is not superficial. It does not live in things. It does not depend on money. It consists in facing life the right way.

Man is built upon the plan of honesty—of rectitude—The Divine Plan. When he prevents his nature by expressing dishonesty, cunning—of course he cannot be happy. The very essence of happiness is honesty, sincerity, truthfulness for his companion must be clean, straight forward, sincere. The moment he departs from the right, happiness will take wings and fly away.

What a pitiable thing it is to see the human race chasing the dollar—material things, trying to exact happiness, to squeeze joy out of money alone. How little people realize that the very thing for which they are searching lies within themselves or no where. That if they do not take Happiness with them they may hunt the world and never find it. Happiness is a condition of the mind. It is a fundamental principle, and he who does not understand this principle cannot possibly be happy.

Real happiness cannot be bribed by anything sordid or low. Nothing mean or unworthy appeals to it. There is no affinity between them. Founded upon principle it is as scientific as the laws of mathematics and he who works his problem correctly will get the happiness answer. There is only one way to secure the correct answer to a mathematical problem and that is to work in harmony with mathematical laws. It would not matter if the whole world believed there was some other way of getting the answer, it would never come till the laws were followed with the utmost exactness. It does not matter that the great majority of the human race believe there is some other way of reaching the happiness goal. The very fact that they are restless, discontented and unhappy proves they are not working their problem scientifically.

We are all conscious that there is another being inside of us. That there accompanies us through life a divine silent messenger, that other higher better self which speaks from the depths of our nature—which gives its consent to every right action and condemns everyone. Men have tried in every possible way to get away from its tormenting reproofs when they have done wrong. But nothing has ever been able to silence the voice. To be happy we must be in tune with this infinite within us—in harmony with our better selves—a clear conscience, a clean life, the elimination of selfishness, jealousy, envy, hatred, are necessary to all high enjoyment. Real happiness is so simple that most people do not recognize it, they think it comes from a scale, from a big fortune or from some great achievement when in fact its derived from the simplest, the quietest, the most unpretentious things in the world. Our great problem is to fill each day so full of sunshine, of plain living, high thinking that there can be no commonness or unhappiness in our lives. Little kindnesses, pleasant words, and helps by the way, trifling courtesies, and encouragements, duties faithfully done, unselfish service, work that we enjoy, love and affection—all these are simple things, yet they are what constitute happiness.

What are the enjoyments of the average rich? Is there anything more reaped, insipid, unsatisfying than the chasing after that indefinite mysterious something, which they call happiness, that will-o-the-wisp which is always beckoning them on, but ever eluding their grasp, that rainbow which recedes as they approach? They may enjoy the temporary excitement and exhilaration which comes from even vicious pleasures, but what of it all?—nothing but regret, disappointment and disgust follow.

There is within every normal person a strong desire, to do something, to be something in the world. It is impossible for a human being to be happy who is habitually idle. There is no tonic like that which comes from doing things worth-while. Man was made to do things. Real happiness without achievement of some worthy aim is unthinkable. One of the greatest satisfactions in this world is the feeling of enlargement of growth, of stretching upward and onward.

If you have not kept alive your ability to appreciate the good and the true you will be as surprised to find that it has left you as Darwin was, when in the middle life he discovered all at once that he had lost the power to appreciate Shakespeare and music. We ought to be able to get a good living, even to make fortunes and yet have a jolly good time every day of our lives. Every day should be a holiday—a day of joy and gladness, of supreme happiness, and it would be if we lived sanely and enjoyed the little things of life as they go along—we are living in anticipation—not in reality. No selfish life can ever be happy—happiness is a reflection, an echo, a part of what we do and think. It does not depend upon our material possessions, it is impossible for the selfish greedy, grasping thought, the thought always centered on one's own interests to produce a happy state of mind. But if we sow helpfulness, kindness, unselfishness, we shall reap a harvest of satisfactions, harmony, and happiness. Selfishness and real happiness never go together. They are fatally antagonistic.

The only way to get the happiness that is worthwhile is to live a straight, clean, pure, honest useful life. There is no power in the universe that can make a human being happy along any other lines.

Straight forward, honest work, a determined effort to do one's best an earnest desire to scatter flowers instead of thorns, to make other people a little better off, a little happier because of our existence; these are the only receipts for real happiness.

No man can be happy when he despises his own acts, when he has any consciousness of wrong, whether of motive or act. No man can be happy when he harbours thoughts of revenge, jealousy, envy, hatred. He must have a clean heart, a clean conscience and above all—God.

It does seem wrong to think that we have a right to be happy, when all around us we see suffering, pain and poverty, when all around us are those who are facing hardships and even starvation.

Even then if it is our lot to such trials, if we could only realize that it is suffering and hardships that sweeten our lives.

If we face our disappointments—loss, sorrow, defeat in the right way and come through triumphantly we will be more sympathetic, stronger, thoughtful, kind and loving our lives will be more beautiful—richer—and we will have more satisfaction—peace with God, to make our happiness complete.

Pensioners --Double Pay

Implements Reduced

A lot of criticism has been heard in Stouffville and elsewhere about veterans engaged actively in business or holding good positions and at the same time drawing disability pensions from the Government, especially in these times when taxpayers are being driven almost frantic to make ends meet.

Surely no fault can be found with the present proposal of the Dominion Government to withhold during the term of their employment the partial or total disability pensions of those engaged in full time service for themselves or at regular rates of pay if working for others.

As the Toronto Telegram sanely notes when a full pension is paid to a veteran it is on the assumption that his war service has rendered it impossible for him to earn his livelihood. If, despite the assumed or pensionable disability, he engages in regular employment at the prevailing rate of pay no hardship will follow if the pension is suspended while his ability to work continues.

Pensioners, Sir Arthur Currie has said, are not given as a reward for service but as compensation for disabilities suffered in war. They are for the purpose of making up for loss earning power because of the handicaps due to wounds or other injuries.

Payment by the government of full or partial pension as well as full salary of civil servants must be regarded as unfair to the taxpayers, including many veterans who are not in receipt of pensions. It also constitutes unfairness to unemployed citizens, for those in receipt of total disability pension to hold a good position while at the same time drawing compensation for inability to earn a living.

The Federal Government no doubt had this situation in mind when the order was issued that veterans in Federal employment must forego their pension payments while so engaged. The order does not involve cancellation. Resumption of payment in case of unemployment is contemplated.

Directors of the Massey-Harris Company have decided to give for the present year a special 10 per cent discount on cash payments, the allowance to apply to both new implement purchases and to payments on existing debts, including interest accrued thereon.

In its announcement the board states that: "The feeling seems general that conditions have taken a turn and that farm commodity prices will rise. We believe the announcement of this reduction is the best contribution we can make toward the prosperity of agriculture and return of employment for our workers."

The Cockshutt Plow Company of Brantford also announced that it would again adopt the plan in effect in 1932 which also permits an allowance of a 10 per cent discount on cash payments.

Constable Pugh had to point his gun at two youths from Scarborough who attempted to escape on Monday when being placed under arrest. They were charged with breaking over 30 panes of glass in a school house in Scarborough.

GUNMEN ROB DRUG STORE

Entering the drug store of Robt. Dales, at Agincourt, around 10.30 last, Thursday night, three gunmen, all armed, held up Dales, and after turning out the cash register, departed with about $20.

Dales was in the store alone, and was about to close up for the night when a young man walked in and asked for a packet of cigarettes. Dales walked over to get the cigarettes. As he did so, another of the thugs entered, pointed a revolver at Dales, and ordered him to stand still. The first man then walked around the counter and ordered Dales to turn out his pockets and hand over the contents of the till as well. The third of the gang stood on guard at the door.

Following the robbery, the men jumped into a parked car, with engine running, and escaped in the direction of the city.

Dales notified the Scarborough police and Constable Howard Cramp was dispatched to the scene of the hold-up. A description was given of the men and this was flashed by Chief Constable Draycott to city and county police.

HOG PRICES ARE ADVANCING.

The farmers heart has been cheered this week by the advance in hog prices. Jas. Crockett shipped one car load of hogs from the local station this week for which the farmer received $5.60 per select. This equals over $8 per cwt. dressed.—Aurora Banner
