Farmers Must Produce

To the man in the street, any at tempts to increase production in these days of depressing world surpluses seem a waste of time, or even worse. He forgets, says Mr. L. II. Newman, Dominion Cerealist, that the problem of the individual farmer differs vastly from that of the nation as a whole, in that the capacity of the farmer to carry on and pay his way is measured in no small degree by the yields he realizes per acre. To the farmer, the acre is his unit of production. If his acreage yields per acre, whether converted into milk, mutton, or beef, or disposed of in their law state, are not sufficiently high to enable him to meet his obligations, he must either succumb entirely or be forced to adopt a standard of living which removes him as an important factor in the problem of keeping the wheels of commerce

Canadian Root Growth

Canadian field root crops, both in yield and quality, raised from Canadian-grown seed are in many cases superior and In all cases equal to crops of the same varieties grown from imnorted seed. However, previous to the Great War there existed a conception in the Dominion that field root seed grown in Canada was not capable of producing as good crops as seed o the same varieties imported from Europe. Until that time the amount of field root seed raised in Canada was negligible, the bulk of the seed used being imported from Europe, supplemented by small quantities from the United States. During the war imported seed was not available, and it was a case of growing seed in Canada or cutting down the acreage of crops. The Department of Agriculture led the way, and since then ample proof has been given, particularly through the extensive tests by the Experimental Farms and Stations, of the continued stability of Canadian-grown seed.
