and then once again his fingers closed over her bare arm, his disengaged hand pointing towards the glow of light outside the hotel.

"There comes back friend Mailison, trying to imitate Sherleck Holmes, and looking very disappointed about it!" he laughed softly in her ear. "You'd better run and put him out of his misery, my dear! If you trot along now and mix with the crowd, you'll no doubt be able to persuade him that you've been all the while looking for him too, throw yourself in his aims and greet him like a long-lost hero."

And because, before she could say more to John Christopher, she turned only to find herself standing alone in the darkness thrown around by that clump of overhanging palms, Sylvia had no alternative but to follow his advice. Bridge Cheaters Use Eyelzshes

(By Frank Emery in Brooklyn-Eagle)

Ten million Americans play contract bridge which in the last decade has skyrocketed into a popularity never approached by such pastimes of chance and stakes as the poker variations, faro, roulette, baccarat, dice or even horse racing.

Contract is the modern game for the card adventurer, the flim-flammer, the chap who lives well by his wits if he hasn't too many scruples to bother him. The game is, indeed, the answer to his prayers.

The bridge knave and his, or possibly her, partner rehearse a system of wig-wags," intonations of the voice, mannerisms, or any hundreds Tried on Son of subtletic; by which they can exchange information not permitted in the bidding and hit the bull's eye ort

SIGNALS

Most of the important bridge and whist clubs have had experiences with pairs of players suspected of system. atically signaling as a means of para ading off with high stakes, and the only recourse has been to simply bard them. Too much success in arriving at the correct contract or a too obvious signaling system may lead to complications but the astute bridge wolves take care not to overplay their tricks. One instance in which use of "wigwagging" signals was proved to the general satisfaction of players in an exclusive Manhattan club involved a titled European pair whose consistent and heavy winnings aroused suspicions and caused the pair to hurriedly decamp from the country.

Several of the victims confided

SYSTEMS "I watched them for almost an hour befoore I finally got the clue to their system, and it wasn't a particularly well-conceived one," Mr. Foster said. "They were making high scores" hand over hand and every bid they made hit the right mark. The man and woman were both very slow bidders, and I was sure the suspicions were warranted. The tip-off came when it struck me that the womanshe was a stunning brunette-did not look at her cards while her partner was bidding. I managed to finish my rubber and walked around to their table as a harmless old kibitzer. "When I knew what to look for, it wasn't very hard. What information they were exchanging was given by blinking the eyelashes. I studied for sometime and then I got the idea. "When one of them blnked once, it was to call the spade suit. Then a pause, and the next blinks would indicate how many honors were held in the spade suit. If the first of these blinks was just a little bit long, it meant top honors. Then another pause, and two blinks to say the heart suit was being flashed, then some on, and four for the clubs." Mr. Foster chose to announce his finding then and there in the card room, and if the scene was lacking anything for the next few minutes, it wasn't action.

This is a Classic Season in Dress

So Says Princess Dilkusha de Rohan of Paris

Paris is in for a classic season in dress. "I believe in the classic," said the Princess Dilkusha de Rohan. "For street wear my line is decidedly restrained, "she added, "throwing into prominence the quality of the materials, which are the result of painstaking search."

She makes a lot of three and some four-pieco ensembles for street, because she thinks it a pleasant variation from the overworked "ensembling" in a single shade. It also gives the wearer a chance to have several charming effects with a single outfit, It is not only smart but economical. Her jackets are short, while her coats are long, or three-quarters, varying from fitted for street to looser lines for sport.

In evening gowns, Princess de Rohan has garnered her inspiration from the Merovingian period. There are flowing draperles for skirts with the fullness both front and back, but . carefully planned to accentuate the natural lines of the figure. There are angel wing sleeves which, when turned back on the shoulders, form a complete cape of what seems a different fabric because of its reversibility. There is always a cape, jacket or novel wrap with each evening dress.

Skirt lengths for sport are 11 inches from .the. floor; . for . street . wear . they come to the shoetop and keep your eye open for the new shoes and for foormal wear they graze the floor or have trains.
