

International Plowing Match

Contestants in Action at the 1935 Meet

The 500-odd sturdy plowmen from Ontario, Quebec, Maritime Provinces and New York State who will take possession of several hundred acres of farm land near Cornwall during the 24th International Plowing Match from Oct. 6 to 9 should not be surprised if their plowshares turn up several arrow heads, stone axes, or other relics of the original holders of the land.

According to J. A. Carroll, secretary-manager of the Ontario Plow-men's Association, the section of Glengarry County in which the 4-day meet will be held was once known as the "Glengarry Indian Lands" and is referred to in "The Man From Glengarry" by Ralph Connor, one of Canada's foremost and best-loved novelists.

Connor, in his book, said "that most of Murphy's crew knew by sight and all by reputation, Macdonald and his gang from the farthest reaches of the Ottawa down the St. Lawrence to Quebec, the Macdonald gang of men from Glengarry was famous. They came, most of them, from that strip of country running back from the St. Lawrence through Glengarry County, known as the Indian Lands—once an Indian reservation."

This strip of land, says Mr. Carroll, was about two miles wide at the western side of Glengarry bordering Stormont, and ran the full length of the county. Deeds were first granted to white men about 90 years ago.

A new company, Derlak (Red Lake) Gold Mines Ltd. has been organized on the "Doc" Oakes claims located adjacent to Rouge D'Or and just north of Madsen Red Lake. While the necessary legal work and organization, a prelude to an offering of shares, is just in hand, it is understood that applications in excess of 600,000 shares have been received. The company is capitalized at 3,000,000 shares, of which 750,000 were allotted to the vendors and are pooled. While no discovery has been made a picket line from the 4,000-ft. long Madsen break indicates that if the discovery continued to carry north it should pass through the Oakes or Derlak ground over a two-claim width. K.B. Heisey, M.E. will direct operation for the company.

At the annual meeting of shareholders of Paymaster Consolidated Mines held at South Porcupine, September 14th, the following were elected as officers of the company: E. H. Walker, president and managing director; A.S. Fuller, vice-president; E. L. O'Reilly, secretary-treasurer; A. W. Hodgetts, assistant secretary and treasurer. The president stated that production continued to increase as evidenced by a bullion shipment representing the first 10 days of September amounting to $33,546. Mill-heads averaged $10.19 during this period.

Finds Hollywood Sets Kissing Style

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. — Sweethearts over the globe pattern their kisses after the screen smacks of film lovers, a motion picture director declared.

"As Hollywood kisses, so kisses the nation," said W. S. VanDyke. Van Dyke considers his belief in the nature of a theory since he has no accurate way of checking it with facts and figures. It is, however, a plausible and well-founded theory, he said, because the screen exerts a powerful influence on the minds and matters of the public.

Save $150,000 In Hospital Grants

Province to Pay Only For the Patients Without Residence.

TORONTO. — A saving of about $150,000 to $200,000 a year to the provincial government is foreseen by Dr. B. T. McGhie, Deputy Minister of Health, in the change in hospital grants which becomes effective Oct. 1.

Under the new plan hospitals will no longer be allowed 60 cents a day for all patients in public wards whether they are paying their $1.75 a day or not. The province, however, will grant hospitals $2 a day for all "floaters", patients who have no established residence and who thus bring no revenue to the hospital from the municipality.

The province will also allow the 60-cent-a-day grant as in the past but only to those patients in public wards who are unable to contribute to their own care.

"We are taking the same position as the municipalities," said Dr. McGhie. "They have been contributing $1.75 a day for indigent patients, and we have added 60 cents for all public patients. Now we will pay $2 for indigent patients who are not being supported by any municipality."

Rocking Chair Is Staging Comeback

BOSTON. — Maybe it's old age pensions. Maybe it's scenes in "Little Women." Maybe it's the end of this fast, streamlined living. Anyway, the rocker is coming back.

If you threw out the rocker with the horse-hair sofa "ladies" and the stuffed birds, you'll be sorry. You'll soon be buying a new rocker and the more it looks like the old Federal or Benjamin Franklin chair, the better you'll like it, says a writer in the Transcript.

"The revival started sensibly enough in the Middle West, but New England and the south, too, are clamoring for their rockers.

"But more than in its charming and homey lines, the new appeal of the old rocker is in its comfort — something old-fashioned which we have almost forgotten. We have become so accustomed to being moved as far as possible from here — and as uncomfortable as possible — that we will all welcome the exquisite pleasure of moving ourselves and getting nowhere — in comfort.

"Do you know how many years it took the modern furniture designers to find out how to make their chairs nearly comfortable? Well, those who designed and made and sat in the old Boston rockers took 150 years to develop the perfectly pitched seat and back. Comfort from experience."

Ottawa Is Asked To Make Inquiries

OTTAWA. — An infant has less of a chance of survival to the age of one year in Ottawa — and less chance by a wide margin — than in 58 of the other 66 major communities in Canada covered by a recent government report.

"That this is a creditable situation or a satisfactory one, nobody will now claim," says the Journal. "That it is capable of improvement, would seem not open to question, because in Ottawa we have no real slums, no large industrial area, while we enjoy pure water, a healthful environment, a temperate climate.

"We should not accept complacently this inglorious pre-eminence. To find the remedy would appear to be the immediate responsibility of the Board of Health and its officials, and the co-operation of women's organizations and the service clubs would strengthen the official hand."

Summer's Ghost

Sweet Summer is dying, or dead, they say —
Quite faded her glamorous charms —
And soon the bright leaves will wither away
Dark-etching the trees' lonely arms.
But how can I grieve for the maid's sad demise,
While this vision walks in her radiant guise.
For, if she's dead, 'tis her spectral form
Must haunt me this clear Autumn day
Each breath coming fragrantly soft and warm.
As it did on her yesterday.
What wraith ever boasted so scouted a breath,
As this fair one breathes in defiance of Death.
The late-blooming flowers feel her presence, too.
As smiling, they bask in the rays
Of the sun that burns in a sky as blue
As dazzled her loveliest days.
Is it sunshine, sweet Summer, will halo your head
When you rest in the heaven of Summers long dead?

Little Jane, age 5, contentedly licking a lollipop, came into a drug store and said her mother wanted a roll of tissue paper. The clerk wrapped it up and handed it to her.
Little Jane — Charge it, please.
Clerk (not knowing her) — Certainly. But who is it for?
Little Jane (sauntering blithely on her way) — All of us.
Mother — What is your baby brother crying about?
Junior — He has dug a big hole in the backyard and wants to bring it in the house.
Some rain must fall on all of us, but the wise ones all carry an umbrella.
Wife (to her husband) — Don't you think this gown is fetching?
Husband (snorting) — Yes, fetching the instalment men and bill collectors.
College Man (who had come to work in the harvest) — I have only one request to make.
Farmer — What is that?
College Man — Please let me stay in bed long enough for the lamp chimney to cool off.
A man of unstable emotions is sure quite frequently, to make a jackass of himself — and that's expensive.
Alice — Would you put yourself out for me?
Fred — Certainly.
Alice — Then close the door as you go.
A good many important discoveries have been made since prehistoric man first learned that cooked meat is better than raw, but no one yet has found any good use for a trophy cup.

PROBLEMS OF EVERY DAY LIFE

By Dr. M. M. Lappin

THE JEALOUS CHILD

"We have two children, both boys, Jack is almost five and Edward is just two. Jack seems to have a jealous, almost a cruel streak in him. He resents me showing love to Edward, and he seems to take a delight in teasing Edward. He is always punching Edward when he gets a chance and I have to watch him like a hawk. If Edward is playing with so a toy, Jack will watch his opportunity and then take the toy away from him. Do you think Jack will grow out of this? Is there anything I can do to help him grow out of it?"

It is not uncommon to find the first child develop a little jealousy when the second appears, and that is hardly to be wondered at, for the child does not quite understand. You see, for almost three years you lavished your love upon Jack, then Edward came along and took up your attention, and Jack, realizing that Edward has, in a manner, come between you and him, and has hindered you from giving him your undivided attention as before, feels resentful, and puts his spite out on Edward. But I am sure it is only a passing phase and he will grow out of it.

There is much that you can do to help him grow out of it, and if you are wise, you will do all you can. To allow this resentful feeling continue in your child will certainly not be for the child's good in later life, so you must help him to get over it. Of course, young children act, for the most part, instinctively, and they have to be trained to reason things out and taught to see what is right and what is wrong.

Part of that training in this case will be making it clear to Jack that, although Edward has come into the home, he still matters and you care just as much for him as before, but that Edward must be cared for also. This connection, if you can get him to feel a sort of sense of responsibility as the elder brother, you will have accomplished much. Of course, you will have to be careful that you do not give him the impression that, now that Edward is here, you have no time for him. He must not be made to feel that he is "left out in the cold", and to avoid that, you will have to try and show equal interest in both.

In the long run, the whole problem resolves itself to one of wise and careful training. Be patient, and reason with the child, and restrain him with love rather than reprimand, wisely directing him and encouraging him in the good he does. Remember, your child is at a critical stage in character formation, and yours is the responsibility of making or marring. Show the right way by deed and word. Be consistent in your example, and I am sure your child will respond.

Empire Defence

Writes the Auckland News: — Mr. Hector Bywater whose knowledge of naval affairs is notably broad and accurate, has raised the question of the probable developments arising from the expansion of European fleets. Two schools of thought, he says, are urging diverse policies in reference to the Mediterranean, where the position is manifestly critical; one considers that steps ought to be taken to now strengthen British naval resistance there, the other would have all Britain's eastern traffic diverted by the way of the Cape as soon as emergencies threaten. Both these policies, however, involve a co-ordination of effort by the British Government and the Governments of the Dominions to keep trade and commerce routes inviolate. They each entail greater expenditure: one by additional cost to protect the Mediterranean link, the other by an increasing outlay on safeguarding a longer route. Again, in both of them is evident an accretion of difficulty and therefore of cost, in maintaining maritime safety at the points remote from Britain, particularly for India, the Orient and the Pacific territories. It follows that thought must be given afresh to the distributing of the burden of naval defence, and that this must be accompanied by a strategic co-ordination as complete as possible. On technical advice, followed by governmental agreement, any needful adjustments can be hopelessly made.

Amelia Earhart To Put A Girdle Around the Earth in Plane

LOS ANGELES—Amelia Earhart, who simply refuses to stay down to earth, is "nearly sold" on the idea of going around it by airplane.

Her wind-blown bob nodded assent last week.

"I'd like to fly around the world," she said, "but I'm a busy person this year. There are other things to do. Next year? Well, one never knows."

The woman who flew over both the Atlantic and Pacific said she has cast herself a "human guinea pig" for future studies of stresses and strains affecting aviation's human element. A world flight might be the logical development.

In November she will bring back here her "flying balarator" — a new 775,000 Lockheed monoplane — which she is taking to Purdue University, Lafayette Ind., this Saturday. Tests will follow, sponsored by the Purdue Research Foundation.

"They've tested airplane parts for years," she said. "I think it's time they got around to the pilot and the passenger, don't you?"

The experiments are slated to include long-distance flights, since engineers say her Purdue-financed plane can go 4,500 miles nonstop. The laboratory plane, fresh from the factory and still untuned to best performance, won her fifth place in the recent New York-Los Angeles Bendix speed dash.

Four 4,500-mile hops in succession would carry Amelia Earhart farther than Wiley Post's skytrail around the globe.

"I know that," she said. "Just talking about it nearly sells me the idea. But I'm not sure — I have no definite plans yet."

"I'm only certain that I'd like to."

MINING NEWS

Brengold — C. W. Workmen, mine manager Brengold Mines, Ltd., in a wire to local officials, states that the cross-cut from the 100 foot level has cut the No. 2 vein, which is at least 3 ft. 6 inches wide and well mineralized. He further reports that, on the 200 ft. level, the westerly drift has been advanced another 60 feet and continuous still in ore. Twelve face samples have been taken and sent out for assay. On this vein, the No. 7, considerable slashing was done to keep the vein in the face. The ore, states Mr. Workman, shows considerably more mineralization with free gold in evidence.

Lateral development is underway on the 875 and 1,000 ft. levels at Morris Kirkland Gold Mines and ore has been encountered on the 1,000 level to the west with $7.10 over 8.6 ft. and $20.68 across five feet secured in the first two rounds in the main break. This is a new ore body, T. C. Fawcett, mine manager reports, and is opening up good possibilities for the lower levels. Work is also being carried out to undercut the 706 and 708 orebodies as well as open up the 1,125-ft. level. Machinery foundations in the mill are being poured. The new headframe has been erected, while the water reservoir and sub-station construction is underway so that operation of the new 100-ton mill should be well up to schedule.

In sinking the No. 2 shaft at Laguna Gold Mines the vein entered the shaft on the west side at 50 ft. below the 750-ft. level. The vein is still in the shaft 12 ft. below where it entered. The average width is 46 inches over 12 ft. and the average grade is 2.67 ozs. or $93.45 per ton, according to officials. This is the finest show in the mine to date. The mill is now handling 59 tons of ore per day.

A new ore section has been entered in the west drift on the 500-ft. level at Green Stabell Mines, showing average grade of $10 per ton across width of 50 inches. The drift has been in the ore for the last three rounds, with the face still in it. So far the west section is the best area opened on the 500-ft. horizon. Two diamond drill holes put out from the 500-ft. level intersected a new vein, which will be further explored by lateral work.

The development campaign at the Advance Red Lake Gold Mines property in the Red Lake area is progressing satisfactorily, M. Madsen, president, states in a wire to local interests. Work is proceeding under the direction of F. M. Smith, M.E., formerly with Mining Corporation, and at present a crew of men are working on three different breaks. High-grade ore from one of these veins is being shipped from the property.

A. M. Potter, engineer in charge of operation at the Kirkland Lake property of Moffat-Hall Mining Co., in a wire to local interests reports that in sampling around the inside of the stope on the 150-ft. level, the Miss Wethered is 34 years old. Her fiance, who is 42, has seats at Knightsaves Court, Tiverton, Devon and Glenferate Lodge, Enochdu, Blairgowrie, Perthshire.

Her first open championship was won by Miss Wethered when she was 20; she was unexpectedly beaten in the semi final the following year, but she won the 1924 and 1925 contests.

She announced after winning the 1929 event that it was her last championship game.

Her achievements include.—

Represented England in international matches six times.

In February last year Miss Wethered joined the staff of a West End store as golf adviser and later toured the United States and Canada as a professional. Montreal golfers thronged to see her exhibition match at Marlborough with Mrs. W. G. Fraser of Ottawa. E. A. Innes and Gordon Taylor.

Sir John Heathcoat-Amory is the eldest son of the late Sir Ian Murray Heathcoat-Amory whom he succeeded as third baronet in 1931.

Whole World Offers Cure for Insomnia

(From the Calcutta Statesman)

Early in the year considerable publicity was given both in India and abroad to the case of a Rai Bahadur Ramjidas Bajoria of Calcutta who had suffered from chronic insomnia for two years.

Through a Calcutta newspaper the Rai Bahadur offered a reward of Rs. 20,000 to anyone who could bring him the "gift of sleep".

Shortly after the publication of this offer thousands of telegrams and letters poured in from many parts of India and countries abroad. They came from doctors, Christian Scientists, hard-worked housewives, actors, authors — from men and women of high and low degree and in every walk of life.

It seemed that insomnia must be one of the world's commonest afflictions, for most of the lay writers described themselves as fellow sufferers.

Many made no claim to the reward, merely expressing the hope that the advice offered would alleviate the sufferings of a fellow being.

Varied and novel were some of the suggested remedies, but the orthodoxy of the Rai Bahadur demanded the applications of some of them impossible.

Mr. H. de Vere Stapole, the novelist, advised the use of a blackened electric light bulb from which only a tiny pencil of light should be allowed to escape. The hypnotic effect of gazing at the slender beam in a darkened room, he suggested, was a sure cure for sleeplessness.

A number of doctors cabled their willingness to come to India to take charge of the case, and at about this time newspapers in America published greatly exaggerated reports with regard to the reward that had been offered.

A more practical gesture was recently made by a London firm manufacturing electro-medical appliances. Without charge they dispatched apparatus for diathetic treatment in the hope that the sufferer might find some alleviation. This gift is being followed by additional electrical apparatus. The accompanying letter asked only that it might be given to a hospital in the event of its ineffectiveness.

For long the affliction refused to yield to any kind of treatment and the Rai Bahadur became despondent. He then underwent a course of massage suggested in a letter from a distant well-wisher. Lately, also, he has undergone the diatic treatment.

According to a relative the Rai Bahadur has made some progress towards what is hoped may prove to be a substantial recovery. He has recently enjoyed short, fitful periods of sleep and is able to walk short distances whereas formerly he was unable to move more than a few yards, painfully, and with the help of his attendants.
