Dan Williamson on the 2nd concession of Whitechurch has a field of rye standing close to seven feet. These days the farmer may well watch growing grain fields with the same heart-flutter that a business man watches the stock market, hoping to harvest what appears almost in their grasp, fearing lest an unforeseen gust sweeps it away. Well, we sure hope there will be no unforeseen winds to blow down the crop at this stage.

A minister the other Sunday in town made the observation that the Sabbath day was no longer a blue Sabbath, when folk wore long faces and many found the day an ordeal. Unhappily, he observed, the pendulum has swung too far the other way. Today's Sabbath means congested highways, busier hospitals and tragic scenes in the morgues of our country, brought about because the people worship gold and pleasure. He warned that where a nation failed to recognize the Sabbath, the soul of that nation dies.

All this is news just as the coming and going of people makes news. Keep up the good work, and when you haven't time to write use the telephone.

On a recent Saturday night some man left his felt fedora hat in the wrong car, and no doubt he has since been telling his friends about someone stealing his headgear. On the same evening a shopper from the country lost five dollars on the street. It was a portion of the cream cheque just cashed, and its recovery would sure be appreciated. If you found any money, please communicate with The Tribune.

What chance would you believe a yearling hen would have pursued by twelve people before or after being run down by a motor car? Well, instead of being run to earth, the bird was still at large, dodging all and sundry who attempted to get in her path. The incident really occurred a few evenings ago. It happened that Miss Sadie Stewart overlooked locking the henpen door for which she may be pardoned, having just arrived back from her long Western trip, and not just being accustomed to the detail of her home and garden. Anyway, next morning every hen had struck for greener pastures, and not until night fall when all sensible folk and even crazy-headed fowl should know enough to be in, was there the remotest chance of making a complete recovery of the flock. Notwithstanding the old adage that birds of a feather flock together, one old biddy refused to return to the home nestings, and this provided all the trouble and a certain measure of fun. When the reporter happened along there were eight or nine added to the chase, but Old Biddie led them along boulevards, down lanes, through hedges. When it looked as though she was cornered, the hen rushed for the open road in front of Sandy Jones' place only to be run over by a speeding motorist who applied all brakes, feeling sure he had run over the hen that laid the golden egg. It looked for the time being that the chase was ended, for by the way the feathers flew, it was estimated there wasn't enough left for a gump-stew, for the party. Nothing daunted just as someone reached for the wreckage, Biddie made off again, dizzy in the head and leading a zig-zag course that fooled every set of outstretched arms ready to receive her. Postmaster Leavens who holds the badge for catching the biggest fish in the north this year, was added to the chase, and as darkness was approaching we estimated that a little strategy would be used, and the hunt called off in the hope that even the foolish come home to roost.
