Not The Last Session

The Ontario legislature will convene on January 10. Much of the time and consideration will be given over to Ontario's effort. There will be no redistribution bill brought down at this session Premier Hepburn has announced.

A Place for Everybody .

The man with big feet and plenty of weight on top top of them is always welcome guest on the day the silo is to be filled and the filling needs to be tramped. Yes, there's really a place for everybody in this old world, but it's often hard to find that place.

A Town Is Judged By Its Citizens'

What impression does the visitor to Stouffville carry away with him? Is it one of pleasure caused by the courtesy extended to him, or does he vow we are a churlish lot? Does he admire our streets, houses, public buildings and methods of trade or does his experience leave something to be desired?

Every corporation is wishful to leave a good impression. Hence it behooves us to take stock of ourselves, or as the immortal Bobby Burns said: "See oursel's as ithers see us." We should turn the searchlight of introspective candor upon ourselves and learn the truth.

Protests Still Continue

Complaints continue to pile up against the two year election term to be imposed over Ontario by the Legislature when it meets next January the tenth. So far we have not read a single weekly in support of the change. A paper with a strong editorial leaning, the Durham Chronicle in a lengthy article sums up the matter thus: "No sir, we resent this governmental interference with our municipal rights. If we people in the country don't want an election, we won't have one; if we do, well, now we can't have one, and all because of a bad pipe-dream somebody had down in Toronto, where they usually do it wrong, judged from a rural point of view. Let the Ontario Government give us our elections. Let us have something. They have taken nearly everything from us now as it is. Country people don't like it."

Annual Breach of Etiquette

The other evening we were the guest of the village reeve at the annual Warden's Banquet held in the City of Toronto. About 700 sat down, and as is the custom everybody is seated long before the honored guest of the evening, the warden, and his head table associates enter the dining hall. The first thing is to call for the "Blessing," and then the first course already on the table is partaken of. But, what generally transpires is that half the people who take their places at the tables to await the honored guests of the evening, sit down and dispose of the first course, which later completely throws them out of gear, and they must feel a bit foolish when they hear the "Blessing" pronounced as the proper signal given to commence eating. .. Experience does not teach some of the guests for they make the same mistake year after year.

Of course there is another side to the perculiar, though not serious breach of etiquette. The banquet is called for 6.30 p.m., and the honored guests do not enter the room until 7 p.m., which perhaps is just as bad manners as those shown by the other guests. With so large a gathering it is difficult to run exactly on schedule, yet something approaching it should be aimed at. Half an hour is rather a long time to wait, and as is the case, many people refuse to wait, and just put their manners in their pocket for the time being.

Don't Blame The Cook

There's an old saying which says to "blame it on the cook," and so recently when the editor of the Financial Post had turnip for dinner which tasted better than usual, he was moved to write about, which gives us the idea he blamstrong bitter tasting turnips on the Here are his exact words: "One day last we had turnips—army turnips—for dinner. As a rule we have no liking for this homely vegetable, no more presumably than the average soldier. But these turnips were sweet, well prepared, tasty. They were the sort of turnips any soldier could have—and enjoy—if the army took a little more trouble to train its cooks."

Probably the editor of The Post does not know his turnips, and that all the professional cooks alive could not make a water core turnip palatable. It is one of the things which agricultural science has not yet been able to successfully cope with, the water core turnip, which is the cause of general grief on the farm at marketing time each fall simply because rutabages with water core is something the farmer cannot do anything about. There is no known way to dispose of water core, although many things are being tried. Unfortunately one cannot detect it in the vegetable until it is cut open, and as water core turnips are usually bitter or strong despite anything the cook can do, often half farmer's crop is rejected at the shipping point because of its presence. If a given number of turnips cut open show water core, the load is rejected entirely, and goes back to the farm for stable feeding.

Nurses Wear New Uniforms

The new-style recreation uniform for nursing sisters was seen when the Lieutenant-Governor and Mrs. Albert Matthews of Ontario received officers, their wives and nurses, who will go overseas with the first Canadian division. Lieut. D. E. Birkett is pictured wearing the Dutch blue, two-piece costume with starched white collar and cuffs and navy blue felt hat. It is compulsory at all social events.
