"DUST WILL KEEP, BUT VIOLETS WON'T"

The spring is here—housecleaning time

Descends upon the land; And busy housewives rush about, A nervous, worried band. With the dawn of springtime fair They faint must fight the foe, And scores of microbes, tons of dust Into oblivion go.

The scent of flowers is in the air, But what care they of this? The birds are singing everywhere All this delight they miss; For, don't you know housecleaning time

Has come upon the land, And flats must be turned upside down And men won't understand.

O sister mine, hold on a space On your dreadnaught campaign; A few weeks more, the selfsame place Will show more dust again; Just take a sniff of springtime air And let the cleaning wait; For dust will keep and violets won't, And some find out too late.
