Less fall wheat may be sown in this district this season. Several farmers have reported difficulty in ploughing the land in preparation for seeding. Continued dry weather has made the soil very hard, and it is a job to keep the plow in the ground. Wheat is usually sown in this section early in September, and a few rains like that of Monday could change this picture.

The break in the hydro system over on Yonge street Monday at noon hour caused great inconvenience in all places east of where the system is being served from this source. Power was not resumed until it was nearing the tea hour, constituting the longest shut-down we can recall. Owing to the lack of power in the office of this paper, where we were already behind schedule, the plant ran practically all night on Monday and Tuesday in order to publish this issue on time.

This is their first experience coming from the South by bus and they thoroughly enjoyed it. The entire trip covered 1800 miles, requiring 48 hours to cover the ground. One does not have to leave the bus for meals if you prefer, they are served aboard, at the proper stopping places. An admirer of the U.S. president, Mr. Jones would like to see still closer bonds between his country and Canada.

How many thunderstorms do you think we have had around here this summer? Before you start guessing, we'll tell you, there have been nineteen. We had five in May; five in June and seven in July and two in August so far. According to local weather prophets this compares on about an equal with last year. Of the nineteen thunderstorms that have broken over the district, less than half a dozen have occurred after dark. Afternoon seems to be the popular time for the heavens to put on their display. The reason for these afternoon storms is because the maximum temperature is usually reached during the afternoon, and according to the weatherman most storms are caused by the rapid vertical rise of moist, warm air.
