WOLF PACK BELIEVED AT LARGE IN KING

Believe it or not, in the outskirts of the metropolitan city of Toronto, now 109 years old, wolves have been killed this winter.

Whether they have been driven this close to the haunts of men and within 20 miles of the civic abattoir by food rationing or the beef shortage, the fact remains that they have been as close to the city as Aurora, and only fifteen miles from Stouffville.

Only two have been killed so far and the rest of the pack—seven or eight—are still at large, roaming the woods, making irregular visits to farm properties in the Aurora district and eluding all the hunting parties of Bing Township farmers, farmers whose chickens and lambs have been devoured in the night.

Both animals so far accounted for have been killed by Kenneth Potage, a farmer who lives at Glenville. The first he shot near the Mulock property and the second—a large female he trapped on his own farm.

The animals are brush wolves, supposed to be a cross between the timber wolf and the coyote. Department of Game and Fisheries authorities report that the presence of wolves in Southern Ontario is not unusual, but it is rarely that they appear in such numbers near a large centre.

Brush wolves were first seen in the Aurora district a year ago, when it is thought a male and female came south to feed on a large number of government-placed pheasants and the jack rabbit, which predatory animals generally follow. Brush wolf litters number from three to nine, which explains the presence of so large a pack in the area. In recent years at least two wolves have been shot in Whitchurch one not far west of Stouffville.

Arrival of the wolves follows by several years the first appearance of large numbers of foxes in the district; where they are now said by farmers to constitute a real menace to the safety of farm animals and chickens.

Local residents have expressed some fear that the wolves might attack smaller children, but depart-

R.C.A.F. Women Get New Uniform

The Royal Canadian Air Force (Women's Division) has a new and streamlined version of its trim blue uniform; and as present ones wear out, they will be replaced by this attractive design. Planned and executed by Canada's foremost fashion authorities, it is practical, becoming, and incidentally saves fabric.

Most notable change is the cap—a curving, wide-visored model of fabric on felt. The tunic has slimmer lines, false upper pockets and patch pockets below; its back is tailored in one piece, with a detachable belt. Kick-pleat skirts are giving way to a style with six flat gores and plenty of swing to the hemline. The greatcoat, with an inverted pleat and half belt at the back, with its lapels flaring higher, and pockets on a diagonal slant, promises greater warmth as well as flattery.

Color, material, and insignia have not altered their proud Air Force identity. Only one "extra" has been added—a flat shoulder bag of blue leatherette, which, swinging from right shoulder to left side, will more than compensate for the departed pockets.

"We'll hold your place"

IN EVERY city, town and village throughout Canada today there are gaps where once were young men. They heard a call and put on navy blue, khaki, horizon blue, and they have gone, answering a call . . .

They are missed—missed not only in their homes but also in the business places which once they filled.

They have gone from every institution in Canada; but from none more than from the chartered banks. There is hardly a branch office from coast to coast which is not today the poorer—and the prouder—for those who thus laid down their pens.

But every branch manager, as he shook parting hands, had this consolation: he could say to every regular member of the staff of the bank, "We'll hold your place. It will be waiting for you when you come back. That is a pledge."

So it is the part of those who remain to serve their country in such a way that the promise may be kept: "We'll hold your place."

There were 14,433 single and married men from 18 to 45 years of age employed by the Chartered Banks at the outbreak of war. 5,053—or 35% of them had joined the armed forces by October 31st, 1942.
