MOTHER OF FOUR IS KILLED BY LIGHTNING

A recent electrical storm at Newmarket killed Mrs. John M. Gordon, as she walked from the hen pen to the house. The unfortunate woman was just under the wire clothes line when the bolt struck, and she was killed instantly. It was about 5.30 and Mrs. Gordon was returning from feeding the hens. Besides the husband four small children are left to battle along in this old world. What a difference a few seconds can make.

VIOLATE REGULATIONS, 89 HALED INTO COURT

Alleged violation of wartime price and supply regulations landed 89 persons into courts throughout Canada last week. Eighty-three persons were convicted and sentenced to fines ranging from $25 to $300. Potatoes and fuelwood led the list of commodities, prices of which resulted in fines for vendors. Other commodities sold at excessive prices were meat, milk, bananas, maple syrup, beer, cigarettes and paper-hanging. Both buyer and seller were fined when a Montreal customer was convicted of purchasing meat without a coupon.

Have your DURO Pump expertly serviced by the

DURO WATER SYSTEMS DEALER

LIKE any other piece of machinery, your DURO PUMP needs attention from time to time to ensure continuous satisfactory performance.

Working parts may wear, requiring adjustment or replacement and regular lubrication is essential.

Until the war is over, it is more necessary than ever that present owners keep their pumps in good running order, because the production of new Duro Pumps is limited.

The Duro Dealer whose name appears below is fully experienced. He will be glad to inspect your pump, adjust it and instal new parts if needed.

Should you be requiring Fixtures or Fittings for Bathroom, Kitchen or Laundry, demand Emco Quality Fixtures and Fittings. Although its range of styles and sizes is limited, due to wartime restrictions, Emco can still supply requirements for the average home.

War Savings Stamps and Certificates should be bought regularly

Sunday School Lesson

Lesson 4. July 25th. BIBLE TEACHINGS ON THE COST OF DRINKING

Golden Text—Know ye not that the uprighteous shall not inherit the Kingdom of God?—1 Cor. 6:9. The Heart of the Lesson

Scripture abounds in warnings of the unhappy consequences that follow the indulgence in strong drink. This hurtful habit, however, is but one of many sinful practices which demonstrate the corruption of the heart of the unregenerate man. Even were it possible to curb these propensities and by "turning over a new leaf" or reforming, live decently in the future, this would not in itself deliver a man from condemnation and fit him for the presence of God. There must be a divine work in the soul, whereby the sinner's life is transformed, when he bows before God in sincere repentance, and receives the Lord Jesus Christ by faith as his personal Saviour. Then he becomes a part of that new creation of which Christ is the Head (Gal. 6:15). The outward life becomes different when a new and divinely given life has been imparted (Eph. 4:22-24).

Verse by Verse
Dtut. 21:18.—"A stubborn and rebellious son". Nothing is more painful for parents than to find their children drifting into vicious habits and refusing to listen to the admonitions of those who would seek to guide their feet into paths of decency and sobriety. Stubbornness, we are told elsewhere, is as idolatry, because it puts self in the place of God, and rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft (or sorcery), because it involves turning to false guides, who are opposed to the way of truth (1 Sam. 15:23).

Verse 19.—"Then shall his father and his mother...bring him out unto the elders of his city." Unable to restrain their wayward son, the unhappy parents were commanded, in the dispensation of law, to turn him over to the civil authorities, that he might be dealt with according to the divinely given commandment. It was their confession that their son, had, by indulgence of wicked and sensual habits, reached a place where he was beyond redemption, so far as they were concerned.

Verse 20.—"He is a glutton, and a drunkard." Shakespeare was right when he put into the lips of King Lear the words, How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is

To have a thankless child—Nothing is more heart-breaking than to see the son of one's love and care drift away from parental guidance, and, in association with others of like tendencies, become the willing panderer to unholy appetites, which eventually make him an abject slave to habits from which he cannot break away, and, alas, in many instances, from which he has no desire to be freed.

Verse 21.—"All the men of his city shall stone him with stones, that he die." This was pure law, unmingled with mercy. It was the way whereby others were warned of the folly of such conduct as that of which the drunken profligate had been guilty, and so was designed to free the community from the evil. How different the New Testament story of the prodigal, subdued at last by divine grace and restored to a place of honor in the home of the father, against whom he had sinned—(Luke 15: 11-24.) He, too, was a stubborn and rebellious son, but grace brought him to repentance and gave him to forgiving love.

Prov. 23:20.—"Winebibbers" and "riotous eaters of flesh." The Revised Version has "gluttonous" for "riotous." Once more, the two evils, drunkenness and gluttony, are linked to gether. Both speak of unbridled appetite, selfish indulgence, and are detrimental to both body and soul.

Verse 21.—"The drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty." Sociologists have, in some instances, sought to show that it is poverty that drives men and women to drink and foster other evil habits. Sometimes this may be true, but much more frequently it is these sins that deprive men of initiative and lead to penury and even criminality. He who resolutely refuses to fall into such debasing habits is far better equipped to make the best of his circumstances and to be actuated by a laudable ambition to improve them. When the love of alcohol predominates, the will to achieve becomes paralyzed and all good impulses are destroyed. This it is that results in the drowsiness or lethargy which clothes a man with rags.

1 Cor. 6:9.—"The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God." The Kingdom is here viewed in its spiritual aspect, as "righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost" (Rom. 14:17). None but those who have been constituted righteous through faith in Christ (Rom 4:3, 5; 8:1-4) and who are made practically righteous through the new birth (1 John 3:7-10) enter into and enjoy these blessings.

Verse 10.—"Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards...shall inherit the kingdom of God." That there may be no misunderstanding as to what is included in the term "the unrighteous," the Spirit of God gives a list in this and the preceding verse of those whose evil behavior proves that they have no part in the Kingdom of God. Among these we find the drunkard. We are not, therefore, to think of drunkenness simply as a misfortune, or perhaps as a disease, dipsomania, for which one should not be held responsible. Drunkenness is a sin, and a very grave sin indeed. It is sin against God, against society, and against one's own body. The next verse gives us the one infallible remedy for this unholy appetite.

Verse 11.—"Such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified." Some in the Corinthian church had once been guilty of the wicked behavior mentioned above. But through hearing and believing the Word of God they had been washed and cleansed, and by the power of the Spirit of God and the all-availing name of Jesus they had been sanctified, or set apart from sin to holiness, and justified from all that once stood against them. Now, cleared of every charge and washed and regenerated by the Holy Spirit
