ACCUSED PAIR PLAYED TRICK ON WRONG MAN

(Walkerton Herald-Times)
That overcoats have lately figured as prominently in the news as on the streets during the recent cold snap which has cast a chill over this part of the province the past few days is evinced by the fact that during the latter two sessions of the local police court here held on Dec. 14th and 21st last the principle case to be tried by Magistrate O.C. Mc-Clevis at each sitting concerning an overcoat.

When Anthony Siegfried of town inquired for his overcoat at the wicket of the check room in the Town Hall following the regular Friday night dance, he received in place of his raiment the sad intelligence that another male flitter of the light fantastic had departed earlier in the evening with the missing garment stating that it belonged to him. Mr. George Damm, member of the Rink Committee which is sponsoring the weekly dances, was at the time in charge of the check room, and stated that the party in question didn't have a coat check and because of which he had at first declined to pass out the sackcloth telling the party that he must wait until the dance was over. The latter, however, stated that he knew his own coat and wasn't going to wait until the end of the dance, declaring that he had a long way to go. His companion also stated that the coat belonged to him, upon which it was given over the counter as a gesture of good faith. By what was intended as a favour to accommodate a fellow mortal who had supposedly lost his ticket and was in dire need of his overcoat to protect him against winter's blast, Mr. Damm was now the established victim of a hoax, who had no idea whatever who the two strangers were who had so completely tricked him. He nevertheless made it known that he would present the price of the missing apparel to Mr. Siegfried.

A little later that evening Chief of Police Gilchrist and Pro. Officer Bob France espied a chariot proceeding east along Durham street in what the latter officer described in the witness box as a very careless manner. They took chase and following the suspicious car, which continued to increase its speed, finally approached within a distance of about fifteen feet from its rear.

From the windows of the pursued machine, to the great dismay and consternation of the officers, there then began to pour forth a barrage of Molitoff cocktails, that would have been devastating to the constables' tires had they not driven their vehicle more in a manner resembling a ballet dancer to escape the fragments of broken beer bottles which covered the macadam. The arm of the law however had as much "wind left in their" inner tubes as they had in their lungs when they a little later beckoned the fleeing machine to a halt. The two occupants of the car had failed in their attempt to destroy evidence of their cargo of spirits, as the officers in searching the glass strewn roadway recovered a bottle of beer intact which the accused had tossed from their car.

If being lodged in the county goal to await their trial in police court on Friday, Dec. 14th, was not such a surprise to the accused pair who no doubt had time to reflect on their conduct of the previous evening, they were, it is safe to state, presented with the surprise of their lives when who should serve them with their breakfast in their cell at the Bruce County bastille the following morning but Assistant Jailer George Damm, who also happened to be the clerk of the coat check room at the Town Hall dance the previous night.

They will now answer the theft charge, one of the pair at least. The coat was recovered.
