LANDSCAPE CONTRAST

Driving to Claremont Monday our attention was arrested by the sight of Frank Beelby cultivating in a field on the Nighswander farm. The dust was going up, and from a distance the soil appeared mellow and ready for spring working. Over in the fence corner was a heap of snow. It looked out of place and unwanted. Its time had passed, but with a mixture of dirt and absence of warm days or rains, it had hung on. The two scenes presented a contrast.

Seeding could be quite general next week if the balmy weather of the mid-week continues. Farmers are out on the land on all sides of the town now, cultivating with a few sowing odd fields.
