NOTICE to Milk Patrons

In anticipation of any increase in the price of milk that may be imposed for a short time during the winter season, patrons of Maple Leaf Dairy are buying up tickets in a noticeable way.
 This is to advise customers that when any change in price (either up or down) is made, all outstanding tickets will have to be adjusted to the new price. Therefore, there is no advantage in buying tickets to be used a long time ahead at this time. Normal purchases should be continued however.

SELDOM SEEN

There is so much good sense and truth in a press report I read a few days ago, that I want to repeat it here. The writer said, (and its as true round about Seldom Seen as ever in Wellington county,) the thing about farming is that there is some kind of common denominator in it, whether the land is turned in Ontario's Wellington County, British Columbia's Okanagan, or along the sidehills of Eastern Nova Scotia. The practices and the crops differ, but the essentials of the life—the socks on the oven door; the smells ranging from the sweet clover to pig manure; the independence that will not stand the human driving of cities, but will stand up to the land's harshest demands to be free of it—these are the same wherever you find them.
 This truth comes through strongly in Kenneth Cragg's "Father on the Farm" (Longmans Green) and, under the easy, affectionate humor with which the incidents are handled, parts of this book will ring like a tune remembered to any farm boy or girl who reads it. No one except a farm boy, away from the farm for a while, could have written it. A city man could spend a year in Wellington County for the express purpose of writing it, but the result would not be this.
 He wouldn't spend his time looking for something significant, or something brave, or something pathetic. He wouldn't think it worth recording that the Ladies Aid meeting, to Walter the hired man, sounded like a houseful of birds. He would never recognize as common; genius father's device of never putting a round-headed bolt into anything without first hammering the sides of the head flat so a wrench would grip.
 He wouldn't describe a wet harvest-season by saying the pitcher on wore rubber boots to the field, or that "it was kind of pitiful to see a hen walk up to the dusting holes and find them full of water."
 But that is the way Kenneth Cragg saw things, during an illness that kept him away from his Ottawa correspondent's job for the Globe and Mail. He saw them that way because he was "the boy of the family" in Wellington County in an era when the model-T was just beginning to get plentiful.
 "Father on the Farm" will be read by many for its humor, though as J. V. McAree says in his introduction, it is never facetious. But for the farm-bred boy or girl it is a little more than that. It points up, gently and effectively the fact that farm life was—perhaps still is—as essentially different from city life as another nationality.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

You who have listened to your radio recently or have read the newspapers, will be aware of what has taken place with respect to the ban on imports of certain American manufactured products, also the increased excise tax on certain Canadian manufactured products. A few of the products we handle and which are affected by the new regulations are radios, refrigerators, oil space heaters, washing machines, irons, toasters, etc. Co-incident with the increased tax on these items, many types of farm machinery have increased in price.
 Fortunately we have a fair stock on hand of most of the items affected, and we will continue to sell them at the old prices until our present stock is gone. So, first come, first served.
