Saturday is Hallowe'en. Parents could help a lot by instilling into the minds of their children that to destroy property is silly and wasteful. To damage property belonging to the town is but to take money from the pockets of their own parents who through taxation keep the park and other town property in condition. There is lots of fun for the fun makers at Hallowe'en without resorting to wilful damage.

About Gardens and Weeds

The number of poorly kept gardens in Stouffville would astonish any one who takes the trouble to wander over the streets and witness the tall stands of weeds. Often these are a menace to neighboring properties where pride is taken in keeping down the weeds and producing food stuffs in these days of exorbitant prices. Perhaps as time goes on and dollar bills become harder to get, householders will be forced to do a spot of gardening in order to obtain those things needed for the table and which to-day cost so much. "I do not plow as many gardens today as was done a few years ago," said John Oxendale, the town's only operator of a horse-drawn plow outfit that makes a regular business of this work. John says many gardens he is engaged to plow do not get worked at all, and grow up in weeds again. There are many good gardens in town still in the opinion of this drayman who has been in more gardens in the community than any other single man.
